*MERRIMAN, Right Rev. N. J.: The Kafir, the Hottentot, and the Frontier Farmer. Passages of missionary life from the journals of the Venerable Archdeacon Merriman. London: George Bell. Pp. iv, 5-200. 16mo. 1853.

The journal extends over the years 1850-1-2, in the course of which the Archdeacon visited the principal towns, villages, and missionary settlements of the Cape Colony, Kaffraria, Natal, and the Orange River Sovereignty, and there is some information respecting the condition of the English and Dutch farmers, at this period, with notes on the Kaffir War. The writer appears to have been hospitably treated by the Boers, and he remarks that he found them "much kinder to strangers than the English people," . . . observing, "I have learnt also to modify my ideas of Dutch harshness towards the coloured people who serve them . . . there is much kindness exercised towards them, in a way that English masters and mistresses seem incapable of. . . . There is less of awful distance kept between the parties. . . . The Dutchman . . . acts peremptorily, but speaks kindly and less haughtily to the native than an English gentleman is used to do to his inferiors." In referring to the trial of a Kaffir for the murder of a native woman, who, he stated, had bewitched him, the Archdeacon dilates on the folly of missionaries, and other "rulers and governors," in impressing on the natives that there was "no such thing as witchcraft," while at the same time they placed in their hands the Kaffir translation of the Bible, with all its references to witches and witchcraft.

*MERRIMAN, Right Rev. N. J. : On the Study of Shakespeare. A Lecture delivered on behalf of "The General Institute," at Grahamstown, by the Venerable Archdeacon Merriman. Published by the Committee of "The General Institute." Grahamstown. 16 pp. 8vo. 1857.

*MERRIMAN, The Hon. JOHN X. : The Commercial Resources and the Financial Position of South Africa. In vol. xvi., "Proceedings of the Royal Colonial Institute," pp. 4-42. 8vo. 1884.

In the course of his address, Mr. Merriman remarked that the words "The South African Crisis," or "The South African Question," seemed constant headings in the daily press, and that South Africa had "for years been the playing ground for fancy experiments in Imperial policy." He went on to observe, "All this is profoundly distressing to South African colonists who love their country all the more perhaps from knowing that the object of their affections is not in universal favour." He gave particulars respecting the population, debt, railways, and farming industries of the sub-continent, and expressed an opinion that the Cape Colony offered a peculiarly suitable field for emigration for farmers with a small capital, "who have some knowledge of their business, and who are not above learning." He maintained that the Dutch owed their political preponderance "to their qualities rather than to their numbers," and to the fact that they are the chief landholders. He characterised them as "Conservative Republicans," having "a disinclination for sudden changes, and a tenacity of purpose which give them in any political contest a tremendous advantage over British colonists." He referred to "the agitators in and about Cape Town," who trade "on the prejudices of the Boer," by abusing England, and to "the marauding ruffians who are giving us so much trouble in Bechuanaland."

*MERRIMAN, The Hon. JOHN X. : "The Closer Union of the Empire." By the Hon. John Merriman, Member of the Cape Legislative Assembly. Ex. "The Nineteenth Century," vol. xxi., No. 122, pp. 507-516. Roy. 8vo. April, 1887.

The Cape statesman observes that "The time has surely come when there should be an end of mere sentimental philandering with the question of Imperial Federation." He discusses the difficulties to be encountered, and asserts that "The change of the British Empire into the British Commonwealth will not be speedily effected," and suggests that it is improbable that the colonies will be found "willing to make sacrifices and to undergo privations for the promotion of the good of their rivals in pursuit of an ideal even so grand and lofty as the Unity of the British Empire."

- *MERRIMAN, The Hon. JOHN X.: A Historic Speech against Annexation, by the Hon. John X. Merriman, Leader of the Opposition in the Cape Parliament. Published in the interests of Truth, by the South African Conciliation Committee. . . . 16 pp. 8vo. (1901.)

This speech "was delivered by Mr. Merriman in the Cape Parliament on September 24 (1901), in support of a resolution moved by Mr. Sauer in favour of the grant of a qualified independence to the Boer States. . . . Mr. Schreiner . . . spoke and voted with Mr. Merriman in support of the resolution." In the course of his remarks the latter stated that the orders for the arming of the Transvaal "were placed before the Raid, but they sprang chiefly from the Drifts ultimatum:" that document "showed Mr. Chamberlain that he could rely upon the people of the Cape Colony to join with him in bullying Mr. Kruger." He also said, "Mr. Fischer, almost with tears in his eyes, told me if we could only get General Butler here at Government House for a fortnight, he would undertake to bring down Mr. Kruger to Cape Town, and settle all points in dispute." He regretted the Boer Ultimatum, but remarked, "In a way it was forced on the Republics . . . which has prejudiced their case hopelessly, and for which I say very little in excuse." With regard to the annexation Mr. Merriman said, "I warn Great Britain against the policy. . . . Some people talk lightheartedly about the solemn act of taking away the life of a nation, but I look upon it as something like murder on the individual. You have no right to stamp out these little nationalities. You may not like their ways; you may think them rough and unkempt when they come into your towns, but you have no right to stamp out the little civilisation of their own which they are building up. . . . I will give my hearty support to any resolution that testifies against the fatal expedient of the annexation of the Transvaal and the Free State."

- *MERRITT, Major WM. HAMILTON: The Work of the Colonial Division under Brabant and Dalgety. A summary of the work of the Division, by Major Wm. Hamilton Merritt, Governor-General's Body Guard, Canada; late Extra A.D.C. to General Brabant, and Galloper to Colonel Dalgety. Reprinted from "South Africa." London: Offices of "South Africa." . . . South Africa: J. C. Juta & Co., Cape Town and Port Elizabeth. 28 pp. Sq. 16mo.

The total strength of the column was 3166 officers and men, but the average strength only totalled about 2800, all of whom were enlisted in the colony, and were under the command of the colonial General, Brabant. The author says that it is only possible to give a general idea of the work accomplished by the division; the men were all mounted, and were kept in touch with the enemy practically all the time, being in pursuit of De Wet for about six months. They were engaged ninety-one times, and fifteen of these engagements may properly be considered general actions; their losses, however, were never heavy at one time, "for the Cape colonial takes the Boer on absolutely at his own game." They took part in the engagements round Wepener, and were instrumental in the relief of that town, on which occasion (April 25, 1900) Lord Roberts sent a telegram of congratulation to Colonel Dalgety and his men. After the relief of the town and the division, the Boers were constantly pursued by the column, which gradually proceeded to Krugersdorp, following the same road taken by Dr. Jameson in the Raid. At this place they were nearly surrounded by the Boers, but eventually succeeded in fighting their way through them, and later on again took part in the pursuit of De Wet. The writer considered that "the typical Cape Colony Yeoman was on equal footing with the Boer" as regards his sight and his ability to converse with the Kaffirs, two points in which General Buller thought the Boers possessed the advantage compared with our troops. There is a sketch map showing the main trek of the Division, and there are several vignettes.

- *METHLEY, JAMES ERASMUS: The New Colony of Port Natal, with information for Emigrants. By James Erasmus Methley. London: Houlston & Stoneman, Paternoster Row. Leeds: H. W. Walker, Briggate. . . . iv + 90 pp. 12mo. 1849.

An early description of the Colony, which the writer visited for the first time in 1847. There are accounts of the towns of D'Urban and Pietermaritzburg, and of the country districts, with notes on the government, climate, products, and wild animals, and some description of the natives, and of the emigration scheme of Mr. Bergtheil.

The author went on an expedition into the "Zoola Country," and visited the town of Nodwengo; he did not, however, meet Panda, the king, who had proceeded to another town in the interior.

Pasted on the last page of the pamphlet is an account of a dinner given by Mr. Byrne, at Plymouth, in November 1849, to some residents of the town, and to the emigrants who were proceeding to Natal under the auspices of the "Port Natal Emigration Company." There is an interesting speech, delivered by Mr. Byrne on the occasion, and an advertisement, which states the terms under which the emigration scheme was carried out.

- *METHUEN, A. M. S.: Peace or War in South Africa. . . . With two maps. Cheap edition, consisting of forty thousand copies. Methuen & Co. . . . London. 128 pp. 8vo. 1901.

Mr. Methuen asserts that he is a pro-Boer if the term implies "a man who admits the splendid patriotism of the Boers, and who believes that the war was unnecessary," but if it denotes "a man who wishes to see his country beaten and humiliated, and who is infected by the virus of unpatriotism . . . I am not one of them." He considers there is a parallel between the war with the American colonies in 1775-83 and the South African War, and maintains that "the history of South Africa is, in the main, the history of the antagonism of the English and the Dutch, and of the dealings of the two races with the natives." Mr. Methuen allows that the Boer limitation of the franchise "was an unfortunate policy," but maintains that it was "in no way a contravention of the articles of the Convention." It is admitted that "the Boer Ultimatum made escape from war impossible," but the admission is qualified by the statement that the terms of the Note were not unreasonable, and it is asserted that "any other state in the civilised world, similarly placed, would have taken the same step." With regard to the conduct of the war, it is said that it involved three stages—"devastation, deportation, and imprisonment . . . a novel method for a civilised country."

*METHUEN, A. M. S.: The Tragedy of South Africa. Methuen and Co. . . . London. 168 pp. 12mo. 1905.

"A revised edition of 'Peace or War in South Africa.'" Many of the chapters are almost entirely rewritten. The story of the campaign is marked by hostile criticism of the conduct of the war, and the policy of Lord Milner is severely attacked. It is asserted that "the Transvaal to-day virtually belongs to an oligarchy of mine-owners . . . a sufficient condemnation of a war which was declared to be an unselfish struggle for the freedom of oppressed outlanders."

*METHUEN, HENRY H.: Life in the Wilderness; or, Wanderings in South Africa. By Henry H. Methuen. . . . London: Richard Bentley. . . . xii+318 pp. 8vo. 1846.

A journal of an eight months' sporting expedition through the Eastern Province to the Orange and Vaal Rivers, Waterboer's country (Griqualand West); and thence in a north-easterly direction to the junction of the Mariqua and Limpopo Rivers as far as Moselekatse's old capital, in what was afterwards known as the Transvaal. The author, who had previously visited South Africa in 1841-2, sailed for the Cape on August 1, 1843, and arrived in Cape Town on October 5th, remaining there till December 12th, and he gives a short description of the city and the surrounding districts. He then sailed for Port Elizabeth, en route for Graham's Town, and soon after his arrival there he met with Messrs. A. Pearson, A. Bain (a well-known writer on South African geology), and G. Monypenny, and they arranged to take a journey into the interior, starting, after some delay and much preparation, on April 29, 1844. They took the road to Fort Beaufort, and while halting at this place, the author saw Makoma, "the celebrated chief and orator . . . in a brutal state of intoxication, surrounded by his wives and chancellors." They trekked and hunted throughout the "Hantam" district, eventually arriving at the village of Campbell in Griqualand, whence they proceeded to Daniel's Kuil and Kuruman, where they were welcomed by the missionaries Moffat and Hamilton. Here they also met Livingstone, who had just returned from Mobatze, suffering from an encounter with a lion, a description of which is given in "Missionary Travels in South Africa" (pp. 11, 12, and 13). The travellers obtained much information from the missionaries respecting the country and the natives, and many valuable botanical and geological notes will be found in the work. The main interest of the volume, however, centres in the description of the game animals, and there are a number of well-drawn illustrations of the heads and horns of various species of antelopes met with in the course of the expedition. With reference to the Boers Mr. Methuen observes, "In many points as regards their simplicity, health, and entire dependence on their flocks, these people are not dissimilar to the patriarchs of Scripture." The travellers met a party of emigrant Boers on the Mariqua River, and the author remarks, "They gave us a kind reception, perhaps a little embarrassed at first by their instinctive dislike of Englishmen." Mr. Methuen returned to England on March 26, 1845. The index contains a "List of Annulosa (principally insects) found on the journey of Henry H. Methuen, Esq. Drawn up by Adam White, M.E.S., &c." A second edition of the work was published in 1848.

- *(METHUEN, PAUL SANFORD, 3rd Baron METHUEN): With Methuen to Kimberley. The Advance reviewed by an eye-witness. President Steyn's villany unmasked by the Boers. Receives £50,000 blood money. Afrikaner Bond as an ally. Free Staters demoralised to the point of Mutiny. Confessions of a C.M.R., a gunner in the Boer Ranks. The end of the war at hand. Deserting en masse by Free State Boers headed by their fighting General. Life in the Boer Camp. Boer General refuses to storm Kimberley. Boers refuse to believe that Lancers are Englishmen. Naval Brigade's perfect shelling. 2000 casualties in one engagement. N. J. Gillet, 5 Hout Street (Corner of St. George's Street), Cape Town. . . . 16 pp. 8vo. 1900.

The author of this sketch appears to have taken notes from a prisoner who had formerly been in the Cape Mounted Rifles. Several of Lord Methuen's engagements are described, and the Boer losses at Magersfontein are put down at 2000, which information is certainly not borne out by other reports. The burghers are represented as disorganised, and indignant at Steyn's alleged acceptance of a bribe of £50,000. They are in great fear of the Lancers and the lyddite, but have their spirits kept up by reports of a succession of victories, manufactured for the purpose by the Free State Express and the Friend of the Free State.

- *METHVEN, CATHCART W.: Sketches of Durban and its Harbour in 1891. By Cathcart W. Methven, M.Inst.C.E., Engineer in Chief, Natal Harbour Board. Durban: P. Davis & Sons. 15 pp.; 35 engravings, map. Quarto. 1891.

It is stated that the illustrations of Durban and its harbour were "executed by the artist direct from nature, except in one or two instances only, where he has been assisted by photography." In the five pages of letterpress contributed by Sir John Robinson it is asserted that Natal's policy with regard to Durban's harbour was to secure an open, free, and safe port, and to connect it by rail with the two Dutch Republics.

A history of the establishment of the Press in South Africa, with an account of the difficulties of the early newspapers in consequence of the hostility shown by the Governor of the Cape of Good Hope. The struggle, which ended in the removal of the censorship and the recall of Lord Charles Somerset, is graphically described, with particulars of the libel cases and an account of the early newspapers of the Eastern Province. The volume concludes with a list of South African papers filed in the Colonial Office, Capetown, up to February 1, 1881.

Mr. Bolus observes that the work was written "by the late Ernst Meyer, Professor of Botany at the University of Königsberg, as the result of the investigation of a collection of South African plants made by J. F. Drege between the years 1826-1834. It is stated in Macowan and Bolus' Botanical Catalogue that the essay is one of "great value upon the Cape Flora and its relations with those of other countries."

Although the volume deals with the religious and educational position in South Africa, much useful and interesting information is afforded regarding social and colonial questions. Mr. Meyer greatly admired the sub-continent, but considered it a great misfortune that the Anglican clergy were so little in touch with the Dutch Reformed Church and other forms of Dissent from the Established Church.

Travels in South Africa during the years 1840 and 1841. A description of the present condition of the Colony of the Cape of Good Hope. By W. Von Meyer. With a picture of a lion hunt.

The narrative, which was first written in the French language, details the experiences of the author during a tour in South Africa engaged in for recreation, hunting, and the acquisition of information respecting the "remarkable land of everlasting Spring." Mr. Meyer sailed from England in the autumn of 1839, and travelled throughout the Cape Colony and Namaqualand to the Orange River. He gives an account of hunting adventures, with notes on the social and political state of affairs at the Cape, accompanied by remarks on the Kaffirs, Hottentots, Bushmen, and other tribes. He appears to have taken up very decided views on the subject of the dispute between the missionaries and the colonists with regard to the native question, and remarks, "It is to be feared that this fine country, which has become a den of thieves, will be turned over to a Paradise of canting rascals (these words are in English), who more or less are full of Jacobin principles (Jacobinischen Prinzipien). These are very hard words, but I can find no others more suitable to illustrate the sad state of affairs, according to my opinion—an opinion which many liberal-minded and educated people in South Africa as well as England entirely share with me."

Note inserted, "With Sir Henry Meysey-Thompson's Compliments, 27th July 1904."

In the Introduction to the reprint it is stated that the British sphere of influence in South Africa includes Natal, the Orange Free State, the Transvaal, the Cape Colony, and Rhodesia, and that England "would not tolerate the interference of any power" in any of these territories, "and would fight to the death before any such interference could take place." With reference to the Transvaal it is remarked, "The unfortunate thing is that by persons in the condition of civilisation and mental development of the Boers, our patience and forbearance are absolutely misunderstood. . . . They have never made the slightest attempt to observe the spirit of the Convention; they have shown us openly that they despise us as a poor, mean-spirited race, and that they consider the way to treat us is to take their own way, regardless of our wishes or ideas, or those of the majority of their own population, and only to give way when obliged." It is maintained that "the injustice and misgovernment of the Boers may now be considered to be proved, and it is impossible for England any longer to look on quietly. In the eyes of the world the responsibility is England's, and England must be equal to the occasion."

The speaker related that in the course of a visit he had paid to Bloemfontein in October 1879, he had a conversation with Mr. De Villiers, Chief Justice of the Orange Free State, when the latter asked him his opinion as to "whether there was any chance of inducing the House of Commons and England to give up and abrogate the suzerainty of England over the Transvaal," and told him that "if England was willing to do this, the Orange Free State would at once amalgamate and fuse with the Transvaal. Also, that they would already have done so had it not been for the suzerainty of England over the Transvaal." Sir Henry points out that the "highest legal authority of the Orange Free State" had quietly discussed this matter, "recognising the suzerainty as an absolute unquestioned fact . . . a fact of so solid and important a character that it was the bar, the only bar, but in his opinion the effectual bar, which was preventing the amalgamation of these two states." This fact, the speaker continued, "should carry conviction to those who have been believing that the Transvaal and the Orange Free State were under the impression that the suzerainty had lapsed and disappeared, until it was revived for the purpose of the late negotiations."

The author was informed by an officer who fought in the South African War that the average weight borne by the horses of his troop was over 281 lbs., and he suggests that this heavy burden on the British horses had much to do with the greater mobility of the Boers. He suggests that, in the first instance, attempts should be made to raise regiments composed of lighter men. The average weight of a stripped man in the troop in question was 11 stone 2 lbs., and it is recommended that, as an experiment, men weighing 9 stone 2 lbs. (on an average) should be engaged. With this as a basis for economy of weight, reductions should be made in the equipment, which would reduce the total burden carried by the horses from 20 stone 11 lbs. to 12 stone 11 lbs. It is stated that our horses broke down by thousands, while the Boers defied and derided our horsemen. The test should be placed in the hands of experienced officers, who "wished to see the scheme turn out a success," and not submitted to those opposed to the trial, and Sir Henry remarks, in conclusion, "Give the small men their chance now, and I feel perfectly confident that they will prove as willing to serve their country, and as capable of doing so, as any of their taller countrymen."

Major Michell states that the following may be esteemed fair rates of travel in Cape Colony; on horseback, six miles; in a horse-waggon, five to five and a half; and in an ox-waggon, three miles an hour. The writer remarks that in travelling at this period the progress attained was very slow, owing to the lack of ferry-boats and roads over the mountains, &c. &c.

An account of the second voyage "set forth by the East India Company . . ." performed by different ships of the fleet, which consisted of four, under the command of Sir Henry Middleton, in the year 1604. Two relations of this voyage are to be found in "Purchas's Collection." The fleet anchored in "Saldania" Bay, where they remained for "five weeks wanting a day," during which period the sailors, many of whom were down with scurvy, all recovered, but Vice-Admiral Cole, of the Hector, lost his life by drowning. The narrative contains an account of the dealings of the British on the fleet with the natives. Accounts of the voyage will also be found in "Astley's Collection," and the Publications of the "Hakluyt Society" (1855).

Paris : A. Nepveu, Libraire, Passage des Panoramas, No. 26.
2 Volumes 8vo. 1 Volume Oblong Folio (16½" × 11"). 1812.

(Graphic) Voyage to the Isle of France, the Cape of Good Hope, and Teneriffe, by M. J. Milbert, painter, on board the corvette Le Géographe, and director of illustrations of the historical section, dealing with the Voyage to the South. With an Atlas composed of three geographical charts, and forty-five picturesque drawings taken on the spot, and partly engraved by the author.

Napoleon I., when First Consul of France, having decided to send an exploring expedition to the South (Terres Australes), the two corvettes, Le Géographe and Le Naturaliste, were despatched on the voyage on the 19th of October 1800, the author having been invited by M. Bory de Vincent to accompany the mission. They arrived at Isle of France (Mauritius) on March 14, 1801, and Mr. Milbert, having obtained permission, remained there until the return of the expedition to the island. Le Naturaliste returned to the island in February, and Le Géographe in August 1803, but the expedition did not start on the return voyage till February 24, 1804. The ships called at the Cape, and the author remarks on the consternation that prevailed in the colony at the retrocession of the settlement to the Dutch. The description of the Cape extends to about sixty pages, much of which has been taken from the works of Barrow and Perron. Mr. Milbert visited Stellenbosch, Simon's Bay, and False Bay, and a view of Table Mountain, and of the "Habitation de M. Klooct a Constance," will be found in the Album. The latter engraving depicts the house built by Simon Van der Stel, which at this period was in the possession of the Cloete family, whose name appears to have been rendered as "Klooct" by the author. In the work entitled "Old Colonial Houses of the Cape of Good Hope," by Alys Fane Trotter, it is stated that probably during the occupancy of the Cloete family "the gables of the homestead were rebuilt, and the statue of Plenty was placed above the front entrance;" the statue does not appear in Mr. Milbert's drawings, and the space occupied by it at a later date was then taken up by a window.

Plate I., "Groot Constantia," in Trotter's work, shows the statue, but in other respects the building appears exactly the same as it did a century previously.

*MILLAIS, JOHN GUILLE: A Breath from the Veld. By John Guille Millais, F.Z.S., &c. . . . With numerous illustrations by the author, and a frontispiece by the late Sir J. E. Millais, Bart., P.R.A. New and revised edition. London: Henry Sotheran and Co. 345 pp. Quarto. 1899.

The first edition was published in 1895 and soon became very rare, and the Daily Telegraph, commenting on the publication, stated that it was "a classic of the shooting world. Never before, or elsewhere, have the winged and furred creatures of the wild lived in their lithe beauty and fantastic grace as in these delicate drawings."

The twelve etchings, 49 full-page engravings, and 88 illustrations in the text, form an artistic production, while the frontispiece, contributed by Sir J. E. Millais, "The Last Trek," is perhaps the most beautiful illustration connected with South African art. A kindly appreciation of his Boer hunting companions is a prominent feature of Mr. Millais' work, the author observing, "I like the Boer, and admire his free and independent spirit. . . . I must say that the Boer is and has been much wronged." His experiences with Martinus, Landsberg, Bossoph (probably Boshof), Roelef van Staden, Piet Verblan, and many others (of some of whom portraits are given), were of the happiest nature, and his companions appear to have been staunch, honourable, and brave hunters, and sterling specimens of the best classes of the up-country Boers. Mr. Millais speaks of them in glowing, and almost affectionate terms, and on his parting from van Staden remarks, "As long as I live I shall remember that day and that hour when the beautiful kindly face and romantic figure of the old man faded slowly away in the flush of the crimson morn."

It is stated that there is an example of the suspension of a Constitution, as the colony of Jamaica, by an act of "local legislature," surrendered the constitution of the Island into the hands of the Crown, and after an interval, received in return the amended constitution now in force there." However, Mr. Chamberlain stated in his despatch that the request for the suspension of the Cape Constitution was "unprecedented," and although the Jamaican surrender bears some resemblance to the case, it must be admitted that it is by no means on "all fours" with it. It is pointed out that the fact that men of Dutch descent are in a majority in the Cape Colony, might have been represented as a reason for refusing representative institutions in 1867, but such a reason could hardly be given to justify the request for a temporary suspension under the existing circumstances. As long as the "constitutional advisers of the Governor" of the Cape Colony do not support the movement, "no one can reasonably expect the Home Government to undertake the responsibility" of even sanctioning any such proceeding.

In the year 1889, when Swaziland was still "the home of savagery," the permanent white population barely numbered 400: ten years later it had quadrupled, and a town had sprung up with all the elements of civilised and commercial life. The country embraces an area of about 8000 square miles, and from 1890 to 1895 was governed by a joint British and Boer administration, after which the Transvaal assumed full rights of protection, jurisdiction, &c., up to the period of the South African War. The speaker gave a general description of the natural features, climate, rivers, geological formation, timber, and native history of the country, with details of its mineral wealth, which at this time included gold, tin, iron, and coal. Some information is afforded with regard to Umbandine, King of Swaziland, from 1875 to 1889, and it is stated that his "commercial instincts were highly developed," and that at the time of his death he was in receipt of £12,000 a year from concessions granted in the country. Mr. Miller remarked that out of the "five million acres comprising Swaziland's superficial area, about two millions consist of land of high quality and eminently suited to the settlement of small agriculturists."

An appeal for the abolition of slavery in the Cape Colony. The pamphlet is addressed to the colonists, and appeals to them to settle the question for themselves, the author remarking, "Let her (i.e. the Cape Colony) set the question for ever at rest in regard to herself, by fixing the day when children born of slaves shall be declared free."

In discussing the apprehensions of those who anticipated the failure of "Responsible Government" for the colonies, the writer gives an account of the circumstances under which Sir Bartle Frere dismissed the Molteno ministry at the Cape. The difficulties in securing harmonious working between colonial legislatures and the Imperial Executive are commented on, and reference is made to a speech made by Burke in the eighteenth century respecting the dispute with the North American Colonies, when he asserted, "No contrivance can prevent the effect of distance in weakening Government . . . the want of a speedy explanation of a single point is enough to defeat a whole system."

A picturesque monograph, full of characteristic stories and interesting episodes, of the career of Sir George Grey. The South African references are exceedingly attractive, many of the incidents related being published for the first time. Mention is made of a letter sent to Sir George by Mr. (afterwards President) Reitz asking him whether he would accept the Presidency of the Orange Free State if it were offered him; Sir George, in mentioning the occurrence, remarked, "I did not see my way to regard the offer, but the making of it manifested a beautiful trait in Mr. Reitz's character. How many men, being tendered the highest post that their country could confer, would have turned to another, asking, "Will you accept it?"

In the course of his reply the High Commissioner said, "We desire that the settlement shall be no patchwork and no compromise . . . not from any desire to trample on a gallant if misguided enemy. . . . 'Never Again' must be the motto of all thinking, of all human men."

*(MILNER, The Right Hon. ALFRED Viscount): Lord Milner and South Africa. By E. B. Iwan-Muller. With two portraits. London: William Heinemann. xxxii + 751 pp. 8vo. 1902.

An account of Lord Milner's policy in South Africa, from his appointment as High Commissioner in 1897 to the outbreak of the South African War. The first seven chapters are introductory, the author devoting much attention to the manner in which British policy in South Africa has been presented in the works of many historians. "Dr. Theal's peculiar historic methods" are severely criticised, and it is asserted that his "History of South Africa . . . is strongly and bitterly biassed against the English," and that Froude, Bryce, and Lucas have followed in his footsteps, especially with regard to the account of Slachter's Nek, while Dr. J. C. Voight's "Fifty Years of the Republic" is styled "the ultimate and consummate blossom of misrepresentation." The circumstances connected with the first annexation of the Transvaal and its retrocession are detailed at considerable length in a chapter entitled "Majubanimitiy," which is enriched by copious quotations from speeches, and extracts from letters and despatches fully illustrating this period of South African history. Of Mr. Rhodes it is affirmed that he has been "first and last . . . a great Imperial Englishman," who believed, and asserted his belief, in the creation of a "United States of South Africa, but as a portion of the British Empire." With regard to the Raid, the author states that he had a conversation with Mr. Rhodes in March 1897, and he had obtained that statesman's permission to repeat its substance. Rhodes, in his curious impersonal manner, put the question, "Why had he anything to do with the Raid?" and on Mr. Iwan-Muller's remarking, "That was just what I should like to know," observed, "There were three reasons. In the first place, after my last negotiations with old Kruger, I came to the conclusion that he was hopeless, and that nothing could be done to remedy the condition of the Uitlanders so long as he was master of the situation. That was the first reason. The second was twofold. One aspect of it was the danger of Germany establishing herself as the protecting power of the Transvaal. . . . The second aspect of the question was . . . that there was a minority of the English-speaking population of South Africa which was hostile to the Imperial connection, and that minority was constantly growing. The time therefore . . . had come to effect a revolution in the Transvaal before that minority had grown into a majority. The third reason was . . . that revolutions could not be effected without money, and at that moment he had at his back a combination of capitalists ready to find the sinews of war. . . ." It is stated that it was felt that a strong man was necessary to protect the Imperial interests throughout South Africa, and it would appear that Lord Salisbury and Mr. Chamberlain arrived independently at the conclusion that Milner was a man peculiarly fitted for the post. Their selection was hailed by the most opposite of political characters, as Milner had the reputation of being a broad-minded, independent, and impartial man, who "had the rare merit of commanding the confidence of public men of very divergent schools of politics." Milner was a complete puzzle to Kruger, who could not understand "his absolute straightforwardness and transparent honesty," amidst "the atmosphere of perpetual and even meaningless falsehood of . . . Dutch South Africa," but from the date of his Graaff-Reinet speech, the Afrikanders realised that the new governor was a power to be reckoned with, and Mr. Merriman, in a letter to President Steyn, remarked that in the speech there was "an uneasy menace of trouble ahead." During the two years' diplomatic wrestling with Kruger the President merely prolonged negotiations and strengthened his resources, but the advent to power of the Afrikaner Bond decided the issue, and the "whole of the negotiations . . . were foredoomed to failure." All the warnings Merriman, Judge De Villiers, Hofmeyr, and Te Water gave were insufficient to stem the obstinacy of Kruger, Reitz, and Steyn, and the correspondence found at Bloemfontein proved their intrigues with Cape politicians, whose advice to "gain time" was not overlooked by President Kruger, whose shadowy concessions, accompanied by impossible conditions, could not deceive even so great a sympathiser as Sir Henry De Villiers. Finally the insolent ultimatum penned by Reitz, the extravagant manifesto to the Free Staters, and the aggressive proclamation of Steyn opened a new leaf in the book of fate; "but the writing was soon to be inscribed by the sword."

- *(MILNER, The Right Hon. ALFRED Viscount): Herr Ausserordentlicher Professor Doctor Carl Milner. (Reprinted from "The New Age," January 1st, 1903.) Folio Broadsheet. 1903.

An article on the subject of the nationality of Lord Milner, who is alluded to as "The German Satrap," the impudent impostor, who speaks of himself as "true-born Briton." It is stated that Lord Milner's grandfather was a Mr. James Richardson Milner, a British merchant who settled in Germany in the year 1825, at Dusseldorf, whence, after his marriage with a German lady, Sophie van Rappard, he moved to a town named Neuss. Here his son "Carl" was born, who on reaching maturity removed to London, and practised under the name of "Charles Milner," in Pimlico and Chelsea, as M.D., Tubingen: subsequently, he returned to Tubingen, where he died in 1882. Charles Milner's son, Alfred, was born at Bonn, on March 23, 1854; he came to England in 1869, was educated at King's College, London, and later on at Oxford, "where," it is stated, "under the sophist Jowett, he learned to make the worse appear the better reason." It is observed that Lord Milner's "later career is too well known. Through blood and tears he has waded to a peerage; his fatal course is marked by the graves of 15,000 innocent children and thousands of brave Englishmen. . . ."

—(Another Edition.) Published by the Imperial South African Association, Westminster. (London.) 33 pp. 8vo. 1905.

A series of valedictory speeches delivered by Lord Milner to the inhabitants of the Transvaal, at the close of his career as High Commissioner of South Africa, in 1905. In the course of his address at Pretoria, the speaker deprecated the jealousy so prominently exhibited at times between the inhabitants of that town and the people of Johannesburg, and in alluding to the criticisms on the Government of the Transvaal he remarked that he could quite understand the abuse of their enemies, but considered that there might be "a little more moderation in the strictures of those who are, or at least ought to be," their friends. Speaking at Johannesburg on March 31, 1905, Lord Milner observed that he did not believe that the Boers as a body "were going to put themselves so completely in the wrong as they would do by refusing to co-operate with their British fellow-citizens on terms of perfect equality," and he appealed to his hearers to promote the Imperial plan "for the defence of their common interests and the development of a common civilisation. . . . British and Dutch alike could without loss of dignity, without any sacrifice of their several traditions, unite in loyal devotion to an Empire State, in which Great Britain and South Africa would be partners, and could work cordially together for the good of South Africa as a member of that great whole."

The speaker, in discussing the grant of Responsible Government to the two new Colonies, spoke of the Cape publication entitled Ons Land as an "insidious and absolutely consistent enemy" of Great Britain. He marked the attitude "adopted by the leaders of the Boers in both the late Republics," and observed, "Only last month we had ex-President Steyn . . . appealing to a Boer audience at Dewetsdorp, and exhorting the mothers, who had suffered so much in the concentration camps, to remember those sufferings, and to teach their children the story." Lord Milner maintained that he was "an out and out advocate of ultimate complete self-government for the Orange River Colony no less than for the Transvaal," but he referred to the possible danger of the immediate grant of the privilege, should the Cape be "once more under the dominion of the Bond."

With regard to the question of imported labour, Lord Milner observed, "If there is one thing which would reconcile those of us who look upon the establishment of responsible government in the Transvaal with the greatest alarm, it would be the feeling, that on this most essential question the people of the Colony were to be allowed to work out their own salvation."

An account of the presentation of an address to Lord Milner by a deputation of Cape Colonists, accompanied by some prominent Anglo-Africans, the deputation being introduced by Sir Gilbert Parker, who read their address. Lord Milner, in reply, alluded to the danger of disunion in South Africa, but "saw no reason to despair" of the ultimate fusion of the "white races of South Africa into one nation."

In the Manchester speech, Lord Milner, in referring to the Chinese Labour Question in South Africa, observed, "To have left the people of the Transvaal free to settle this question for themselves, as the Ministry originally intended, would have been to carry out the principle of self-government. But instead of that, the question is first settled, or rather unsettled for them, in the Letters Patent, by the complete destruction of the existing system, and the brand-new Legislature is then called upon, in the very first days of its existence, to deal with the resulting chaos, with the agreeable consciousness that whatever it decides is liable to be vetoed by the Government at home." With regard to Imperial Unity, it is remarked, "The self-governing colonies are no longer, in anything but name, under the Colonial Office, or, indeed, under any British authority except the King. They are, in fact, States of the Empire, and the United Kingdom itself is such a State. . . . we wish the kindred peoples under the British flag to remain one united family for ever, and we believe that it is only by such union that they can attain their highest individual development. . . ."

The Galatea was commissioned by Capt. H.R.H. the Duke of Edinburgh (afterwards Duke of Saxe Coburg Gotha) on January 24, 1867, and after a short trip to the Mediterranean went on a cruise round the world. On August 4th the Galatea set out for the Cape, which was reached on August 15th, and after being entertained by the Admiral at Simon's Bay, the Duke and his party left for Cape Town. There is a good description of the festivities and ceremonies celebrating the visit, and it is remarked that "There was an unmistakable evidence of affectionate regard for His Royal Highness on the part of the Cape people, who remembered his former visit, and seemed to look upon him as in some sort belonging to them." On September 6th the Duke, accompanied by the Governor, Sir P. Wodehouse, Sir Walter Currie, General Bissett, and several officials, embarked on H.M.S. Racoon, bound "for the Knysna on an elephant-shooting trip." The account of the hunting expedition is supplemented by an extract from the Duke's letter to the Prince of Wales, which gives an animated description of the excellent sport enjoyed by the party. Some verses are appended, written by Mr. A. W. (afterwards Mr. Justice) Cole, which give an amusing and lively account of the chase and destruction of the elephants.

In his review of the broadsheet, Colonel Duff "vindicates so thoroughly the conduct of the operations of the war and of our officers and men alive," that Mr. Milward decided to publish the pamphlet as a reply to Mr. Stead's publication.

The author, evidently a man of education and ability, affords a short but interesting description of Cape Town and its vicinity at the end of the eighteenth century. He was impressed with the appearance of the city and remarks, "The splendour of this town quite obliterated from my mind all the magnificence of Calcutta." He asserted that the "European Dutch women . . . were very fat, gross, and insipid; but the girls born at the Cape are well made, handsome, and sprightly; they are also good-natured, but require costly presents. Even the married women are suspected; and each of the Englishmen of rank had his particular lady, whom he visited without any interruption from the husband, who generally walked out when the admirer entered the house." It is stated that there were no baths, "either hot or cold, in the town; and ablution is quite unknown to the inhabitants." The writer refers to the "many delightful evenings" which he "passed at the house of Lady Ann Barnard, who," he states, "every week gave an entertainment to all her acquaintances."

It is stated that these poems were written during the author's residence at the Cape (where he was in the Cape Civil Service), at the time of the Zulu War. The poems are entitled, "The Battle of Isandhlwana," "The Defence of Rorke's Drift," "The Battle of Ulundi," and "The Death of the Prince Imperial, and Gabura's Promise." With regard to the latter, it is stated that Gabura was the head-man of the clan by whom the Prince was slain, and he took an oath that the grave should never be desecrated.

*MITFORD, BERTRAM: Through the Zulu Country. Its battlefields and its people. By Bertram Mitford, late of the Cape Civil Service. . . . With five illustrations. London: Kegan Paul, Trench & Co. . . . xi + 323 pp. 8vo. 1883.

An account of a trip through Zululand, undertaken in 1882, with the special object of visiting its battlefields and studying the character and social position of its inhabitants, "gathering their opinion on the subject of the recent campaign and other questions relating to themselves and their national polity." The author left England in November, and he gives an account of his voyage to Durban, from whence he proceeded to Maritzburg by rail. Here he invested in a waggon and oxen, and proceeded with his tour through the country, "rolling tediously along . . . at the rate of three or four miles an hour." After a somewhat adventurous crossing of the Tugela, Mr. Mitford reached Rorke's Drift, and remarked that "few or no traces of the old fortifications were to be seen . . ." and "save for the little cemetery, where are lying the few who fell of that handful of gallant defenders, it would be difficult to realise that one stood on the site of the most brilliant feat of arms of our day." The next day he travelled to Isandhlwana, and although three years had elapsed, there were no lack of traces of the struggle, and it is observed that "bones of horses and oxen gleam white and ghastly, and here and there in the grass one stumbles upon a half-buried skeleton." The author gives a narrative of the battle, related by a warrior of a native regiment who was present, and who alluded to the eclipse which occurred when "the frightful conflict was at its height." He visited the spot where the Prince Imperial fell, and mention is made of the fact that the cross placed there by Queen Victoria was formally handed over to the local chief Sabuza and his clan to take care of—a task faithfully performed. Among the other historic places visited were Eshowe, Inyezane, Hlobane, and Ulundi, &c. &c., and reference is made to the engagements which took place on these spots. Mr. Mitford spent three days with John Dunn, and formed a high opinion of the white Zulu chief. He (Dunn) was strongly opposed to the return of Cetywayo, which "he looked upon as a direct breach of faith with himself." Mr. Mitford observes that "the native chiefs and their followers did not share John Dunn's views, and were anxious for the King's restoration." When the author returned to Cape Town he had an interview with Cetywayo, and was favourably impressed with the King, whom he describes as having "a broad intelligent face, with good eyes, and a pleasing expression." The volume contains an excellent account of the Zulus, who are characterised as being "a quiet, kindly, light-hearted race, sober, cleanly, and honest." It is stated that they bore no ill will to the English, but abhorred the Boers, of whom they remarked, "They are mean, and liars—always on the look-out to steal our land."

With frontispiece by A. Wallis Mills. London : F. V. White and

The novel is stated to be "devoid of any political purpose or leaning whatsoever," and the author endeavours to make his readers comprehend that the Boers, like all other people, are by no means all good or all bad. He explains that there are many British people who believe that "every Boer is the blackest ruffian unhung," and in order to combat this impression he has introduced specimens of "Boer life and character in every phase," into the pages of the story. The tale is written round the period immediately subsequent to the Bloemfontein Conference, the time intervening before the outbreak of war, and the earlier stages of the South African War, and purports to throw light on the methods by which the emissaries of the Republics successfully persuaded many of the inhabitants of the British colonies who were of Dutch descent to embrace the Boer cause and join the armies of the Transvaal and Free State.

This book is dedicated to Johan Colenbrander, who took a great part in the stirring scenes enacted in Rhodesia at the time of the Matabele Rising, on which event the story is founded. Although the work is an avowed romance, a good picture is afforded of the state of the country, and its inhabitants, during the rebellion. The writer does not hold the Chartered Company innocent of all responsibility for the war, and by no means overlooks the grievances of the natives. He evidently considered the establishment of the native police (who afterwards revolted) a serious mistake, and one which was far from popular with the Matabele; he also seems to have thought that the districts ruled by the different native Commissioners were too large for thorough control, and it is hinted that too little caution was exercised during the war in discriminating between loyal natives and rebels. In the opinion of the author there seems little doubt that the rebellion was distinctly traceable (at least, in part) to the irritation of the natives at the destruction of their cattle in connection with the outbreak of rinderpest.

A diary compiled from letters written by a young officer to his mother, detailing his experiences during the South African War from January 1900 to December 1901. In a short memoir it is stated that Lieut. Bernard Moeller joined the Hon. Artillery Company as a private in 1891, and becoming a second lieutenant in 1896, was subsequently raised to the rank of a full lieutenant. He had a great love for the army, and much desired to obtain a commission in the regulars, and on the outbreak of hostilities volunteered for service in the C.I.V. He was twice mentioned in despatches, and his "services were so thoroughly appreciated that he was selected by Lord Roberts for the honour of a commission in the 2nd Middlesex (Duke of Cambridge's Own), a circumstance specially mentioned by His Majesty King Edward VII., when speaking, as Prince of Wales, at the Guildhall on the occasion of the C.I.V. banquet." At the time of his death he had been recommended for further special promotion. Lieutenant Moeller was commissioned in January 1901 to form the company of mounted infantry of the 2nd Middlesex Regiment, and he "took part in the great drives under Generals French, Bruce-Hamilton, and others." In one of these he and his men were attacked by a party of 500 Boers, who were attired in khaki, and being mistaken for "Plumer's men," were allowed to advance without suspicion. They were outnumbered, and the survivors were retreating, when Moeller, "looking back, saw to his horror a wounded lad, with his hands up in token of surrender, treacherously shot by Boers." He immediately dashed forward to avenge his comrade, but was surrounded by thirteen or fourteen of the enemy; he refused to surrender, and "emptying his revolver and charging into their midst, he flung the empty weapon into the face of the nearest, and as they opened fire, fell from his horse, wounded and bleeding to the ground." He was carried into Standerton, where he died, a few days later, on December 23, 1901.

Mr. Moffat considers that there is a curious likeness between the American Civil War and South African War, in so far as the latter was affected by the question of the rights of the black man, and says that "there are lines of cleavage in South Africa that go deeper than any question that was raised at the Bloemfontein Conference, or even than the general attitude of the Boer and Uitlander in Johannesburg." It is stated that "the Boer looks upon the black as a 'schepsel' (creature), not as a man. He may have a right to kindly treatment like a horse, but legal rights as a human being, no!" Particulars are given of Article 9 of the Grondwet and other regulations affecting the natives, and these are compared with the legal rights of coloured people at the Cape. The article concludes as follows: "Let those who are contending for what they call the 'independence' of the Boer Republics remember the following facts. We cannot ignore the black man as one of the chief factors in the future of South Africa. On the subject of the black man the Boer regime and that of Great Britain are irreconcilable. Two dominant systems so virtually different cannot exist side by side. The predominance of the Boer is out of the question, that of Great Britain the only possible alternative."

The preliminary chapters deal with the opinions of the author on the origin of the Hottentots, and give a synopsis of the early work of the London Missionary Society in South Africa, reference being made to the labours of Drs. Vanderkemp and Philip, and other pioneer missionaries who preceded Mr. Moffat. The volume gives a valuable account of mission work among the Bechuanas, with notes on the customs of the natives, and a description of the earlier travels of the author, and some information is afforded respecting the reformed savage Namaqua chief "Africaner." The appearance in Cape Town of this convert was the cause of much wonder and astonishment, his arrival having been awaited with considerable scepticism by Lord Charles Somerset, who was much struck with this example of the results of missionary enterprise, and who "expressed his pleasure at seeing thus before him one who had been the scourge of the country and the terror of the border colonists." An interesting account of Moselekatse and his people is given, and it is remarked that this well-known potentate "seemed anxious to please and to exhibit himself and his people to the best advantage." There was, however, considerable difficulty in ascertaining the chief's real character, as no one in his dominions "dared breathe a syllable that was not calculated to set him forth as the best and noblest of beings, immaculate in his actions, the very perfection of all that was lovely, just, and good." He was very gracious to the missionaries, and appreciated their previous kindness to his envoys, and Moffat gained considerable influence over him, and was instrumental in obtaining his permission to allow a mission station to be established in his country. There are some particulars concerning Dr. Andrew Smith's expedition into the interior in 1835, and there is an ample account of the labours of the various missionary societies engaged amongst the Bechuanas, Matabeles, Basutos, and other races at this period.

Mr. Moffat was of opinion that as the Orange River had been declared the permanent boundary of the Cape Colony, it was necessary that a correct map showing its geographical position should be prepared, and being in Namaqualand, and travelling to Kuruman, he resolved to construct one on his homeward journey. The then Governor, Sir George Grey, hearing of his intention, agreed to assist in defraying expenses, and the map was duly made and sent to the Royal Geographical Society. There is a good description of the country traversed, particularly from a geographical and geological point of view; but these regions seem to have been very sparsely inhabited and of little value, and the few Namaquas encountered appear to have been very poor and miserable.

*(MOFFAT, ROBERT AND MARY): The Lives of Robert and Mary Moffat, by their son, John S. Moffat. With Portraits and Maps. Third Edition. London: T. Fisher Unwin. xix + 484 pp. 8vo. 1885.

"Robert Moffat was born on 21st December 1795, at Ormiston in East Lothian," and starting life as a gardener became greatly attracted to a religious career, soon after which he conceived the idea of becoming a missionary, and entering the service of the London Missionary Society he sailed for the Cape on January 13, 1817.

It had been arranged that Messrs. Moffat and Kitchingman should proceed to Namaqualand, but Lord Charles Somerset at first refused to allow them to go beyond the boundaries of the Cape Colony. Later on, however, the Governor consented to their departure for Namaqualand, and they started on their journey on September 12, 1817, and arriving at their destination, remained there about twelve months, Moffat visiting Bechuanaland and subsequently returning to Cape Town, where it was arranged that he should accompany Messrs. Campbell and Philip on their tour. In the course of the journey war broke out with the Kaffirs, and Moffat and Dr. Philip returned to Cape Town, but early in 1820 John Campbell and the missionary and his wife started for Lattakoo, where the Moffats remained till the year 1824, when they visited the Cape. Soon after their return they were enabled to devote themselves to the task of removing the mission to Kuruman, where an important and flourishing station was established. Mr. Moffat went on a visit to the Bechuanas in 1827 and lived for a considerable time with the natives, acquiring a thorough knowledge of the language, which enabled him on his return to preach to the aborigines in their own tongue, and soon after a great change set in, the natives came rapidly under the influence of religion and civilisation, and the station began to be a real success. In 1835 Sir Andrew Smith visited Kuruman, and Moffat accompanied him to Moselekatse's headquarters, and was allowed by the chief to obtain timber for his church. In 1838 Mr. and Mrs. Moffat visited England, and here the former published his "Missionary Labours and Scenes in South Africa," and superintended the printing of the Sechuana New Testament and other religious works in the native language. They returned to South Africa in February 1843, and on their arrival at the Vaal River were met by David Livingstone, who soon after married their daughter Mary. Other visits were paid to Moselekatse, and also to Secheli, and a mission station was established at Inyati in Matabeleland, in 1860.

On March 20, 1870, Moffat preached for the last time at Kuruman, and three months later sailed for England, where Mrs. Moffat, whose health had broken down, died on January 10, 1871. Mr. Moffat was received in the highest circles with great kindness, and immense admiration was expressed for his useful and able career. He settled at Brixton, and in spite of his age lived an active and vigorous life, which terminated on August 9, 1883, at the age of 88.

Y., Eighth Division). With illustrations and map. Second edition. Knapp, Drewett & Sons, Ltd., Kingston-on-Thames and Westminster, S.W. xlvii + 222 pp. Cr. 8vo. 1903.

The Eighth Division, which was mobilised in March 1900, disembarked in the Cape Colony and Natal between the 4th and 10th of April. It was commanded by Lieut.-General Sir H. M. Leslie Rundle, and early in the campaign the author commenced taking memoranda respecting the services of the force, which he afterwards put into book form. The volume follows the general route of the division, and includes notes concerning all the places of historical interest visited, the operations having been mainly confined to the Orange River Colony, and there are a number of views, many of which were contributed by officers in the army, together with some portraits, the "Casualty List of the Eighth Division," and a sketch map showing the lines of its march. The work affords an account of the enveloping tactics which resulted in the capture of Prinsloo's army, and it is stated that the task was carried out under great difficulties, and the troops engaged "were gaunt, ragged, and hunger-stricken," their appearance and condition leading them to be called by the popular name of "Rundle's Greyhounds."

numerous full-page woodcut illustrations, four chromo-lithographs, and a map. London: Sampson Low, Marston, Searle and Rivington. xiv + 462 pp. 8vo. 1875.

Mohr had been fired by the accounts of Carl Mauch's discoveries, and set out on an expedition, "partly for the sake of hunting, partly in the hope of making geographical discoveries." He was joined by Mr. Adolph Hübner, the expedition being financed by Dr. August Petermann, and the travellers sailed in the Celt, arriving safely at Durban on February 8, 1869. On reaching Pietermaritzburg they were met by Thomas Baines, who was proceeding with some companions to the Tati, and after some delay the journey was resumed via the Umgeni Falls and Colenso to the Tugela, and then across the Drakensberg Mountains to Harrismith and Potchefstroom, where they again encountered Baines, and were visited by Carl Mauch. There is an interesting account of the journey, the scenery being described in glowing and picturesque language, with many anecdotes relating to the natives and Boers, and to the excellent sport enjoyed en route. They arrived at the Tati on July 26th, and found Sir John Swinburne and about thirty or forty diggers busily, but not too successfully, prospecting for gold. Mohr soon tired of camp life, and after some hunting experiences with a party of Bushmen, made his way into Matabeleland, which he found in a most unsettled state owing to the struggle for authority between the chiefs Umbigo and Lobengula. He met the latter on October 6th, and was favourably impressed by the "princely barbarian," who "behaved with the greatest courtesy." The king dined with him, and expressed his deep regret that he could not at present allow Mr. Mohr to proceed to the Zambesi, and took his leave "with all the politeness of a chivalrous knight." The author returned to the "Mangwe" River and engaged in hunting, and on November 20th was rejoined by Hübner, who had succeeded in getting permission to proceed to the Zambesi. It was, however, impossible to travel during the rainy season, which lasted for several months, so Hübner decided to visit the new diamond discoveries on the Vaal River at Pniel. Mohr remained at the settlement on the banks of the Mangwe, but started in March for the Zambesi, reaching the Victoria Falls on June 20, 1870. He gives a description of the famous cataract and the surrounding country, and of his experiences on the march from the Tati. The return journey was started two days later, and the expedition travelled through districts swarming with big game, and enjoyed splendid sport. Generally speaking, Mohr appears to have got on very well with the Boers and the natives, and his accounts of some of his adventures are very amusing. He tells us of one of his Boer hunting companions, who was very indignant with him "for prying into Heaven" with a telescope, and who told him that "it behoved good Christians to wait till we were dead, when the dear Lord would show us His wonders up there." He recognised at this early date that the discovery of diamond and gold fields in the Transvaal and Orange Free State would jeopardise "the independence of these provinces," and remarks that "no one could imagine that the thousands of British subjects who poured into the Transvaal were likely to respect the laws and customs of the Boers, a race in every respect inferior to their own."

- *MOLESWORTH, WILLIAM: (Private). Materials for a Speech in defence of the Policy of Abandoning the Orange River Territory May, 1854. London: Charles Westerton. 35 pp. 8vo. 1854.

The arguments adduced by the author in support of the abandonment of the Orange River Sovereignty by the British Government were considered so relevant to the Transvaal position in 1878 that when Messrs. Kruger and Joubert visited England, to endeavour to bring about the retrocession of their country, they requested Lady Molesworth's permission to reproduce what, in their opinion, was a most conclusive and convincing pamphlet. The reasons given for abandoning the territory throw some light on the interest taken in the colonies at this period by the average inhabitant of Great Britain. It was stated that it would cost £200,000 a year to keep the colony protected, which would mean about £400 a head for settlers who desired British protection, as it was maintained that the white population, as a whole, had been "long and perseveringly hostile to our Government"; and it was argued that the country was not a valuable one, and the only people in favour of British rule were a few missionaries, storekeepers, and land-jobbers. The author asserted "that sound policy requires us to abandon a territory which can be of no use to us either as a commercial colony or as a place of resort for our emigrants; which is inhabited by disaffected Boers and hostile savages, and exposed to the incursions of the fiercest barbarians on the face of the earth, and which can only be retained by means of a large and increasing expenditure. . . ."

John Charles Molteno was born in London on June 5, 1814, and was of Italian descent, although his family had long been settled in England. He proceeded to the Cape in 1831, and was at first an assistant in the Public Library, Cape Town, but later on engaged in farming and commercial pursuits. He took part in the Kaffir War of 1846, accompanying Sir Andries Stockenstrom as Commandant. He was elected member for Beaufort West in the first parliament of the Cape Colony, and became a leading politician and an advocate of responsible government. In 1872 Mr. Molteno was called upon to form the first ministry under responsible government, and he held the reins of power under several High Commissioners. He was a great opponent of Mr. Froude's policy, and did not support Lord Carnarvon's ideas with regard to federation. The writer of the memoir alludes to the "school of despotism" that Lord Carnarvon turned to "to over-ride the expressed wishes of the Cape Colony, the Free State, and the Transvaal," and he speaks disparagingly of Sir Bartle Frere, who, he states, "acted as dragoman to the Prince of Wales on his tour through India." He maintains that Frere "was far from being a constitutional Governor," and that he was sent to the Cape "to be the dictator of South Africa up to Zanzibar." A long account is given of the disputes between the High Commissioner and Mr. Molteno and his ministry, which culminated in their dismissal, a step asserted to be "unprecedented in colonial constitutional government," and it is observed that Mr. Martineau, the biographer of Sir Bartle Frere, Mr. Todd, the author of "Parliamentary Government in England," and the "Dictionary of National Biography," were all ill-informed as to the real circumstances of the case. Mr. Molteno joined the Scanlen Ministry in 1881, but did not remain long in office; he retired into private life, and was made a K.C.M.G. in 1882. He died on September 1, 1886.

London : Sampson Low, Marston & Company, Limited. . . . xxii + 260 pp. Cr. 8vo. 1896.

This work was written before the Jameson Raid, and was about to go to press when the news of that episode reached England, and the author remarks in referring to it, "It will be for the reader to judge how far the dangers which I have foreshadowed have in some instances been brought into active operation, and he will gain a keener appreciation of the arguments in the text for the necessity of Union." Mr. Molteno asserts that "Federation was looked upon as the certain result of the grant of Responsible Government to the Cape," but the annexation of the Diamond Fields clouded the rapprochement of the states and colonies, "and finally the whole matter was shipwrecked by Lord Carnarvon's ill-advised attempt at a forcible confederation." He refers to Mr. Kruger's "closing of the drifts" incident, which he calls "the ill-conceived and ill-advised action of an autocrat," but he argues that the President had had to face one of the greatest difficulties which any statesman can be called upon to face, viz., "the peaceful invasion of his state by foreigners who outnumber the original population." He states that the difficulty in South Africa is political not racial, and as proof refers to the fact "that the two Dutch Republics have never succeeded in uniting together," a matter generally put down to the opposition of England. It is maintained that after all their troubles and dangers the population of the Republics have become attached to their own respective governments, and that this is a sentiment which "must be considered in any plan of a confederation of all these peoples into a United South Africa," and it is suggested that the sole matters which should be reserved for the central (or Imperial) power ought to be "the making of peace and war, the sending and receiving of ambassadors, and generally all that comes within the department of international law." With regard to any connection at all with any outside power, it is admitted that it might be necessary to have a connection with some one of the great powers of Europe, "in the early days of our national life." The author recommends that such connection be made with England, "rather than with any other European power," because while "all the other great European powers are under despotic rule . . . England is the freest country in the world."

The author opposes the theory of Livingstone and subsequent writers that the Victoria Falls have been caused by some convulsion of nature, causing a crack in the basaltic rock, and holds that "the combination of cañon, gorge, chasm, and falls is due to the ever reducing action of moving water, eating back with relentless energy, year by year, and age after age, into the hard and stubborn wall of igneous rock."

The author, who came of a far-famed fighting stock, went to Africa in January 1878, as aide-de-camp to General Thesiger, and he gives an excellent description of the hostilities with Kreli and Sandilli. After the end of the campaign he was invalided, but returned to Natal soon after the battle of Isandhlwana, and went through part of the Zulu War. There are some interesting notes concerning John Dunn, who gave some assistance as guide to the author's brigade, and who is described as having been "a genuine man, brave, generous, warm-hearted, and to us on this expedition certainly a host in himself." There are some particulars respecting the death of the Prince Imperial, and the opinions of some of the officers on Lieutenant Carey's conduct. An amusing story is told about Bishop Colenso, who happened to be travelling with the author to Maritzburg, when the General in command was expected. General Molyneux observes, "When we were three miles from Maritzburg a strong party of men rushed at us, took our horses out of the omnibus, cheered like maniacs, and began to drag us before the town." This was not exactly pleasant for the Bishop, who had opposed the war and stuck up for the Zulus, and he shouted, "I am the Bishop! I am not the General," whereupon they were left to cool their heels on the road without their horses, and "a quarter of an hour later the post cart with the real General and his party galloped madly past us to avoid the demonstrations."

The report, which is addressed to the Chairman and Members of the Board of Health, is interesting as throwing some light on the heavy mortality in the Refugee Camp (Concentration Camp), which, in this instance, was due to an outbreak of measles. It is stated that the population of Kimberley was taken at 18,000 white people and 23,000 coloured, whilst Beaconsfield had 3000 white and 8000 coloured. Dr. Monk refers to the objection entertained by the inmates of the Refugee Camps "to call in a doctor or allow their children to go into hospital," and he remarks that the result is "that there is scarcely a tent in which the measles did not run through the family."

The author apologises for presenting Cetywayo as a warlike monarch, and is of opinion that our invasion of Zululand was a political necessity, brought about by the existence of the military organisation of the Zulus, which was becoming a menace to South Africa. The novel contains a picture of the home life of the Zulus under the famous king, and there are many stirring military and hunting scenes.

All the characteristic virtues and peculiarities generally accredited to the better class of Boer farmers appear to have been brought together in the person of the hero of the tale, but it is questionable whether any burghers quite so unsophisticated as Hans Van Donder have existed for a considerable time past.

- *(MONTAGUE, JOHN): Biographical Memoir of John Montague. With a sketch of some of the public affairs connected with the Colony of the Cape of Good Hope during his administration as Colonial Secretary from 1843 to 1853. By W. A. Newman, M.A., Dean of Cape Town, and Senior Colonial Chaplain. . . . London: Harrison, 59 Pall Mall. Cape Town: A. S. Robertson, Adderley Street; W. L. Sammons, Plein Street. xiv + 612 pp., 8vo. 1855.

John Montague was born in the year 1797, and in 1814 joined the army as an ensign, and after rising in the service to the rank of a captain proceeded to Tasmania, where he eventually became Colonial Secretary.

Leaving the Colony owing to a difference with the Governor, he was appointed to the office of Colonial Secretary to the Cape of Good Hope, where he arrived on April 23, 1843. Amongst his earliest tasks in the Colony was the placing of its finances on a new footing, and "so clear was the new system devised by Mr. Montague for paying the debt and increasing the revenue of the Colony . . . that in two years and a half the whole debt was liquidated." During Mr. Montague's official career great and lasting improvements were carried out in the interior of the Cape Colony; the country was opened up by new passes and roads; convict labour stations were organised; Robben Island was fitted up for the reception of lunatics, lepers, and incurables; a system of judicial reform for the colony was drawn up, and a Government scheme of education formulated; and in all these measures for the benefit of the Cape, Mr. Montague was the leading organiser and administrator, and by his vigour, energy, and foresight was instrumental in carrying out these schemes with well-deserved success. It is stated that his attitude on the question of representative government at the Cape, and with regard to the anti-convict agitation, was misunderstood by some of the Cape Colonists; but his integrity of purpose was never seriously questioned, and the able memorandum which he drew up on the subject of the proposed legislative bodies for the Colony formed the basis of the constitution provided for by the Letters Patent granted on May 23, 1850. Mr. Montague was characterised by self-reliance, a grasp of conception, and a great capacity for public service; his steady vigilance, firmness, and honesty resulted in his wielding immense influence in South Africa, and he is recognised as one of the wisest and most upright of the advisers who have moulded the destinies of the sub-continent.

An account of the latter part of the Zulu War of 1879. The author left for the Cape in February, and arrived in "Funkland"—as he stigmatises South Africa—only to find that "red tape is as rampant as at home," and delays and disappointments the order of the day. The war was the great topic in Cape Town, and the main point of discussion was, on whose shoulders "the final cost of the war" should fall. Every opportunity appears to have been taken to let the British troops understand that the Cape would not pay for the hostilities, and the writer left the Colony "but little impressed with the loyalty of its inhabitants." His impressions of the people of Natal were but little more favourable, as it is remarked that a school of small white children gave the British soldiers a cheer on their arrival, but that "was the only cheer which our countrymen gave us in the Colony." The colonists averred "that England got them into the mess, and they look to her to get them out of it. Hence they gave our troops no welcome, after their long journey out to help them." The colonists—though many of them are represented to have been in a great state of "funk"—are stated to have been very bloodthirsty, and to have wanted the whole Zulu nation to be annihilated. There is an interesting account of the march through the country, which appears to have been exceedingly slow and wearisome, the troops being apparently very sick of the long waiting before the battle of Ulundi was fought. It is remarked that after this engagement the Zulus were quite convinced that they could not successfully encounter the British, and on many occasions when bands of Zulus were met they remarked, "You have beaten us—that is right; now go away."

The author was sent by Sir G. Colley, at the outbreak of the Boer War (1880-1), to take command of the town and garrison of Standerton, some sixty miles within the Transvaal boundary, and he arrived there on December 24th, and immediately set to work to put the local defences in order. The garrison consisted of 300 troopers and about 450 civilians. Some of the men of "the 94th Regiment were met at the border by a brother of Joubert's" and "ordered to halt under peril of attack." A letter was produced, signed by Kruger, Pretorius, and Joubert, stating, "We not being in war with Her Majesty the Queen, nor with the people of England . . . but only recovering the independence of our country, we do not wish to take to arms, and therefore inform you that any movement of the troops from your side will be taken by us as a declaration of war. . . ." The letter was addressed to the Commander-in-Chief of Her Majesty's troops on the way to Pretoria, but the officer took no notice of this document, and proceeded to Standerton. The town was soon placed under martial law, and not long after was rigorously invested, the siege being protracted for eighty-eight days. It is stated that the Boers did little or nothing in the way of assault, although it was believed that at one time Joubert contemplated attacking the garrison with a gun and 3000 men. News of the signing of peace reached the commanding officer on March 26, 1881, whereupon the men were withdrawn from the defence.

This volume, written by the widow of the author of "Angola and the River Congo," gives an account of her experience during a second visit (of five years' duration) to what she calls "the benighted region of Delagoa Bay." The book is described as being "a medley of everything in general and nothing in particular," and it is asserted that political and geographical matters were purposely excluded; considerable information is afforded respecting the botany and natural history of the Mozambique province of Portuguese South Africa, and there is a good description of Lourenco Marquez, brought up to the time of the opening of the railway to the Transvaal border (1887-8). The writer appears to have been a keen observer of the birds, reptiles, and insects of the country, an ardent naturalist and botanist, and an energetic and successful collector. Mrs. Monteiro gives an account of the customs of the native tribes; according to her experiences, the Kaffirs of the province were extremely indolent and improvident, and she recommends the introduction of coolie labour.

Seventeen reasons are given for opposing the "libels" directed against the British settlers and others; recorded in Dr. Philip's researches. There is also a map and a sketch of the Institution of Theopolis and the surrounding lands, drawn on stone by I. C. Poortemans, Cape Town. Although the title states that the work was written "by the British Immigrants of 1820," the compiler of the catalogue of the Fairbridge Library attributes it to Donald Moodie.

December, 1836. (1st Bushmen, pp. 110, with three supplements, each iv pp. 2nd Kaffirs, pp. 79, with supplement, viii pp.) (Cape Town.) Folio. (1836.)

Each of the Parts is divided into six Periods, and the information afforded commences with that supplied in the first supplement, which consists of "detached Papers, relating to Bushmen, of dates prior to the commencement of the more complete series." These papers embrace records from September 7, 1769 to 1784, and are followed by the "First Supplement to Papers relating to Bushmen, 1785-1797," and the "Second Supplement to Papers relating to Bushmen, 1769-1785." The six Periods, 1786-1834, contain all the documentary evidence respecting Bushmen and Kaffirs, from the establishment of a Magistracy for the eastern portion of the colony at Graaff-Reinet, 1786, to the final submission of that country to British authority, August 1797. Other periods deal with what occurred during the first British occupation, under the Batavian Government, from the second capture of the Colony, 1806, to the expulsion of the Kaffir tribes, 1812, and from that time to the Kaffir Irruption of 1834.

These volumes are extremely scarce, and there are no copies (1908) in either the British Museum, the Royal Colonial Institute, or the Colonial Office Libraries.

*MOODIE, DONALD: The Record, or a series of official papers relating to the condition and treatment of the Native Tribes of South Africa. Compiled, translated, and edited by D. Moodie, Lieut. R.N., and late Protector of Slaves for the Eastern division of the Colony of the Cape of Good Hope. Cape Town: Published by A. S. Robertson.

Part I. 1648-1720. Pp. 1-446.

Part III. 1769-1795. Pp. 1-112.

Part V. 1808-1819. Pp. 1-60. Quarto. 1838-1841.

The first and one of the most important publications in connection with the translation and compilation of the Cape Archives. At the inception of the work the expenses attached to it were defrayed by the Cape Government, who paid for the production till July 1837, after which it was arranged that private subscriptions should be accepted, and a list of such subscriptions will be found in this copy. The support received from the public being inadequate, the work had to be discontinued, and Mr. Donald Moodie proceeded to Natal, where he occupied several important positions under Government, being subsequently appointed the Speaker of the first Natal Parliament and Colonial Secretary of the Colony. Such parts of the series as were published, were issued in a somewhat erratic manner, and the information afforded, though valuable, is of a fragmentary nature. Mr. Theal remarks ("History of South Africa, 1486-1691") that he had not been able to make use of the volume, as his "aim was to collect information concerning the colonists as well as the natives"; nevertheless, the contents of the volume give much information outside native affairs. Dr. Bleek observes, "I never met with a book that appeared to me of so much value for imparting an accurate knowledge of the ethnography of Southern Africa, and none is so rich in facts." The volume is very rare, and few copies possess the whole of the parts which were issued. Part I. contains the first instructions to Jan Van Riebeeck, together with extracts from his journals and despatches, the transactions and journals, &c., of his successors down to Simon Van Der Stel, and the latter's journey to Namaqualand. Part III. mostly consists of despatches from the Governors of the Cape (1769-1795) to the Landrosts, and correspondence between the latter and the Cape Government. Part V. contains the "Journal of a Tour to the North-Eastern Boundary, the Orange River, and the Storm Mountains, by Colonel Collins, in 1809."

According to the British Museum Catalogue, the publication of Part III. of the work was discontinued at page 64 of that section, but this is incorrect, as Fairbridge's copy contains 112 pages in Part III., as also the copy in the South African Library, Cape Town. The generally accepted version of what was actually published is Part I., 446 pp., Part III., 112 pp., and Part V., 60 pp.

In a footnote to the first page of Part V. is the following: "The publication of these pages—suspended at the date 1690, for the reasons stated, Part I. p. 446, was about to be resumed at that of 1774, when, upon application to the author of 'Researches in South Africa' (The Rev. John Philip), a prospect has been held out by him of procuring for insertion the official authorities—not to be found elsewhere—upon which his statements (Vol. I. pp. 41-6) are said to have been founded. The alternative of commencing a new series has therefore been preferred to incurring the risk of omitting any important document. (May 17, 1841)."

The "Specimens" and the "Inquiry" were published together at seven shillings and sixpence, and the "Inquiry" separately at five shillings.

*(MOODIE, DONALD): Correspondence between Donald Moodie, Esq., compiler and editor of the Cape Records, and the Rev. Cape of Good Hope: Printed at the Office of "De Zuid-Afrikaan," and published by A. S. Robertson, Cape Town, and J. M. Richardson, London. vi+76 pp. Roy. 8vo. 1841.

An interesting series of letters on the subject of the statement on the title-page, which had been published in Mr. Philip's well-known work. Mr. Moodie, who had been entrusted by the Cape authorities with the compilation and publication of the Records of the country, asked Mr. Philip to furnish him with particulars regarding the "official authority" for his assertion, at the same time intimating to him that there was no paper in the Archives bearing out the statement. A long correspondence ensued, and search appears to have been made by Mr. Philip, the Rev. A. Faure and others, but the missing paper was not forthcoming, and Mr. Moodie was evidently of opinion that the statement had been made without sufficient proof of its correctness. In addition to the correspondence there is a record of "Accounts of the object and tenor of the order of 1774," with notes on the subject, together with an appendix containing extracts from newspapers and other sources on the matter. On the back of the cover is a list of the compilations of the Cape Records.

*MOODIE, DONALD: An Inquiry into the Justice and Expediency of completing the Publication of the Authentic Records of the Colony of the Cape of Good Hope, relative to the Aboriginal Tribes. By Donald Moodie. Cape of Good Hope: Published by A. S.

Robertson, Cape Town; and J. Richardson, London. Pp. iv, 29, 8, 48. (Cape Town—printed; Green Wrapper.) Quarto. 1841.

In an address to Lord John Russell which prefaces the work, Mr. Moodie observes that the compilation of the Cape Records had been commenced by the instructions of one of Lord John's predecessors in office, at the public cost of the Colony, but that subsequently the subsidy was withdrawn and the publication had to depend upon mere casual support, and he states that whether the work will ever be completed "may in a great measure depend upon the light in which the subject may be viewed by" the Secretary of State for the Colonies. The volume contains a "Memorandum; for the information of the subscribers for the publication of the Papers collected from the Cape Records, relating to the Native Tribes"—a pamphlet of 29 pages—which gives some particulars of the progress of the work, and the opposition aroused in certain quarters to the publication of the Records, which, it was contended, had been mutilated and misquoted for political purposes. The quoted strictures of the Cape Commercial Advertiser, and the correspondence with Captain Stockenstrom, Sir B. Durban, Lord Glenelg, and others, throw considerable light upon the animus exhibited on the subject, and upon the arguments used for and against the continuance of the work. The next portion of the publication is entitled "Report of the Committee to the Subscribers of the Fund for Printing and Publishing the Documentary Evidence relative to the Intercourse of the Colonists and Cape Government with the Native Tribes. By the Hon. H. Cloete, Es. LL.D., and Lieutenant-Colonel Bird, late Colonial Secretary (Second Edition)," and is a document of eight pages which discusses the previous mutilation of Parliamentary papers, and recommends that Mr. Moodie should be re-engaged to complete his work. The last portion consists of forty-eight pages, entitled "Remarks upon some of the Results developed by the publication of a Portion of the Cape Records, relative to the Condition and Treatment of the Native Tribes of Southern Africa, by a Member of the late Committee," which serves to show that the colonists had been maligned and misrepresented with reference to their relations with the natives.

By Donald Moodie, Editor of the Cape Records. Cape of Good Hope: Published by A. S. Robertson, Cape Town; and J. M. Richardson, London. 64 pp. (Blue Wrapper.) Quarto. 1841.

It is stated that the official papers from which this portion of the "Record" was compiled were "recently restored to the Colonial Archives under circumstances detailed in the published correspondence between the compiler and Dr. Philip." This publication is simply Part III. of "The Record," pp. 1-64, which is prefaced by corresponding passages of the "Researches in South Africa" (by the Rev. J. Philip), "in order to enable the Government and the public to determine the comparative value of the evidence . . . with a view to the formation of a definite opinion upon the expediency of completing the publication of the compiled evidence." Two hundred copies of this part of "The Record" were published in this separate form with the above-mentioned Preface.

According to Fairbridge's Catalogue, Chapters I. and II. were all that were published, and the British Museum Library only possesses these two numbers. On the other hand, "The Origin of the Bushmen" is also headed by the title "South African Annals"; but the British Museum copy wants the wrappers on which there is probably the title or sub-title, "A Voice from Kahlamba," which appears in the entry respecting this item in the Fairbridge Catalogue. There can be little doubt that Moodie intended "The Origin of the Bushmen" to form one of the chapters of "South African Annals," as the type and general appearance of the publication exactly corresponds with that of "European Population" and "Saxon Nomads." A curious point, however, is the number given to the chapter, i.e. XIX. The preceding work is given as Vol. I., containing sixteen chapters, and there is no trace regarding the intervening chapters, XVII. and XVIII. The scope of the intended but evidently uncompleted work can be gauged by the headings of the other chapters, the complete list of which is as follows:

- I. European Population.
- II. Saxon Nomads.
- III. Native Nomads.
- IV. Native Herdsmen.
- V. Where are the Aborigines?
- VI. What Right have we here?
- VII. Relation with Herdsmen.

- XVI. Smuggling and Luxury.

"A Voice from the Kahlamba, No. II.," would appear to have no connection with the other series, although frequent reference is made in it to the "Origin of the Bushmen." (Though it was issued by the same publishers, it is printed in different type, and bears no resemblance to the preceding issues. The information afforded in the published items is of considerable interest to students of the history of the native races of South Africa; in the Preface Mr. Moodie alludes to the withdrawal of Government support which led to the discontinuance of the publication of the records, and it would appear that there was not sufficient public assistance in Natal to allow of the completion of the "South African Annals," which would have had the effect of continuing the publication of the "Cape Records" in a different form.

Note.—It is extremely difficult to follow and trace these publications, in consequence of their excessive scarcity, and the fragmentary and erratic manner in which they were issued. Under the circumstances, and in view of the limited information and data at my disposal, I have grouped the three items together, as there appears to be a connecting link between them.—S. M.

A work regarding the native question in Natal, including many references to the treatment of the coloured races throughout South Africa. In a letter dated Natal, May 14, 1860, Mr. Donald Moodie, in addressing a correspondent, remarked that Her Majesty's Government had directed that his claims upon the colony should "be brought forward in such a manner as to leave the decision upon them entirely to the discretion of the Legislative Assembly," and he had therefore "caused to be printed, with some additions, extracts from the papers which were laid on their table last session, and on which their Select Committee founded a favourable report."

The 7th son of Donald Moodie—the pioneer compiler of the Cape Records—the author was from his early youth connected with research into South African history, having assisted his father in the compilation and translation of the Records. Subsequently, however, Duncan Moodie quitted South Africa for a considerable period, and at the time of the Zulu War was residing in Adelaide, South Australia, where he was engaged, to use his own words, in “editing a paper of an offensive nature.” About this time a local printer, aware of his South African connection, “suggested a book on the Zulu War, of which he would take the risk.” The scope of the volume was, however, considerably extended, and the author, “taking Natal” as “a standpoint,” produced the first volume of “Battles in South Africa,” &c. The intention was to continue the subject during the existence of the Zulu War, the termination of which would bring the work to a close. The publication was a success, Mr. Moodie remarking, “The critics were gracious, and I was relieved from a state of starving authorship, in which, like a South Africa Bosjesman, I vacillated between a famine and a feast,” and the South Australian Government purchased 100 copies for the use of schools and institutes, &c. When Mr. Moodie returned to the Cape in 1886 he decided to recast the work, and while retaining the title of the original narrative, make the work more of a “history” of the “battles,” &c., as regards their connection with the discovery and settlement of the sub-continent. The author’s previous long residence in South Africa, his intimate acquaintance with the Cape and Natal Archives, and the sources of information thrown open to him by his friendship with Messrs. Theal, Leibbrandt, Chase, Fairbridge, Shepstone, and other students of South African history, have resulted in the production of an interesting work, extending to over 1200 pages, which brought to a successful conclusion the labours of Mr. Moodie, for the purpose of which he had been collecting information for a great number of years. The volumes contain particulars of every disturbance in South Africa down to the end of the Zulu War, and include in their compilation the essence of the best works on the subject, in addition to those facts elicited by the researches of the author. Many of the notes scattered through the volumes, and the valuable appendices, afford information which does not appear in any other works of a similar nature, and the general chronology is one of the best that has been compiled. There are a number of portraits and illustrations, a map of South Africa, and a chart showing the “Route of the Trek Boers from Pretoria to the Cunene River, 1875–1879.”

This address was delivered at the Royal United Service Institution, and it deals largely with the native population in the Transvaal, and the policy of the British Government in respect to it.

P. Moodie, late member of the Transvaal Volksraad. Transvaal Independence Committee. . . . London: William Ridgway. . . . 17 pp. 8vo. 1881.

It is asserted that the Transvaal Government had no fear of a Zulu invasion, and that the great majority of the people were opposed to annexation in 1877. In the second letter it is maintained that since the year 1868 the Volksraad had, by its own efforts, suppressed every form of slavery.

Prize Essay, published under the auspices of the Committee appointed at the public meeting held at the Town Office, Durban, on the 12th August 1870. Natal Mercury Office, 1870. To which is added extract of a letter from Sir John Swinburne, from the "Times" of November 12th, 1870. London: G. Street. . . . 12 pp. 8vo. 1870. BRITISH MUSEUM LIBRARY.

One of the earliest published reports on the Diamond Fields. It is evident that the City Fathers of Durban clearly foresaw the benefits which would accrue to Natal if a large population were attracted to South Africa by the newly discovered Diamond Fields, more particularly if the emigrants adopted the route through the colony of Natal. The result of the meeting referred to in the title was that a prize of £10 was offered "to the writer of the best essay on the facilities of the Natal route to the diamond fields," and in order not to lose any time it was stipulated that "each Essay" had "to be submitted within twenty-one days." Mr. Moodie suggested a route via the Suez Canal to Natal as the shortest and best route from Europe, and considered it "within the limits of probability that before the Christmas of 1871 has dawned a regular route" would "be opened from Europe to Natal via Suez." Details are given of the ox-waggon route from Durban via Maritzburg, Harrismith, Winburg, and Boshof to Pniel, then the centre of the alluvial diamond diggings, a distance of 350 miles.

Vol. II. viii + 352 pp.

London: Richard Bentley. . . . 8vo. 1835.

The author arrived in Cape Town on September 12, 1819, and proceeded to his brother's farm, Groot Vaders Bosch, in the Swellendam district, of which he soon took the management. It is remarked that Benjamin Moodie and the other farmers of the district had built a storehouse at the Breede River, near where Fort Beaufort now stands, and from this centre were able to export their produce, in consequence of which they were enabled to grow treble the quantity they originally produced. In the year 1820 Donald Moodie arrived, and the three brothers proceeded to the coast, where the 1820 settlers had landed, and they inspected the country set aside for them. It was soon arranged that they (the Moodies) should receive government grants of 400 acres each, on the terms given to British officers, and they founded the little village of Fredericksburg, the nucleus of the future Port Elizabeth. Owing, however, to the withdrawal of the troops to the West Coast of Africa, and the absence of protection from the natives, the Moodies eventually withdrew, Benjamin obtaining a farm in the Uitenhage district, and his brothers following him soon after. The latter were granted two farms, 500 acres in extent, and they soon settled on their property. Soon after, Donald was appointed Resident Magistrate of Port Frances, and he sold his interest to the author, who, to use his own words, led "a kind of Robinson Crusoe life" on the farm. Of this he eventually tired, and getting a neighbour to manage the property on half shares went on a tour to Kaffraria, and after a stay of some months at Graham's Town sailed for England, arriving on October 21, 1829. The author was not an admirer of the Dutch, except as regards their hospitality, but he was of opinion that they were unjustly charged with indolence by people who knew little about the difficulties of the country; he remarks on their "singular uniformity of character," their love of "Semmigheid," or cunning, and their great ignorance and indifference to truth, decency, and morality.

Major Moodie left South Africa in 1829 and settled in Canada in 1832, serving for some time in the "Provincial Militia," and being afterwards raised to the rank of Captain and Paymaster. Later on he was selected for the post of Sheriff of Hastings, an appointment he retained for many years, but he subsequently employed a Deputy Sheriff, and in doing so "unwittingly transgressed the law in the transaction," involved himself in a series of lawsuits, and was finally compelled to relinquish his appointment. Mr. Moodie states in the Introduction, "I look to this little book as a means of support for my wife, now advanced in years, and myself," and he relates many interesting details respecting his career, and the fortunes of other members of the Moodie family. The five chapters entitled "South Africa and its inhabitants" are, in the main, reproduced from the author's earlier work, "Ten Years in South Africa."

The authoress (née Miss Susanna Strickland) was the youngest sister of Agnes Strickland, the historian, and she met her future husband, Major John Wedderburn Dunbar Moodie (author of "Ten Years in South Africa"), at the house of Thomas Pringle, in the year 1829. Soon after their marriage the Moodies settled in Canada, and this work gives some account of their experiences in that Colony. In a chapter contributed by Major J. W. D. Moodie he remarks, "When I left South Africa it was with the intention of returning to that Colony, where I had a fine property to which I was attached in no ordinary degree." It appears, however, that Mrs. Moodie had taken a prejudice against South Africa, and asserted that she was justified, in view of the statements which had appeared in her husband's work. The latter observed that, although he "had plenty of land, and of all the common necessaries of life," in South Africa, he "lived for years without companionship, for my nearest English neighbour was twenty-five miles off. I hunted the wild animals of the country, and had plenty of books to read ; but from talking broken Dutch for months together, I almost forgot how to speak my own language correctly. My very ideas . . . became confused and limited, for want of intellectual companions to strike out new lights, and form new combinations in the region of thought ; clearly showing that man was not intended to live alone."

The edition was limited to one hundred and fifty copies, of which this is No. 122.

The connection of the author's family with that of the Moodie family dates from the middle of the nineteenth century, when his mother, Margaret Melville Moodie, married Charles Henry Theodore Bruce, eighth Marquis Ruvigny, &c. The pedigree of the Moodie family is traced back to Robert the First (The Bruce), King of Scotland (1274-1329). The Moodie family have been prominent colonists in the Cape from the early days of the nineteenth century, many of its members having been connected with its early colonisation, official life, and literature. The volume contains much information respecting Benjamin and Donald Moodie and their descendants, and includes portraits of Captain James Moodie, R.N., Captain Benjamin Moodie, who settled at Groot Vaders Bosch, in the Swellendam division, Donald Moodie, R.N., the well-known South African historian, Major John Wedderburn Dunbar Moodie, author of "Ten Years in South Africa," George Pigot-Moodie, Esq., J.P., proprietor of Moodie's Gold Fields, near Barberton, South Africa, and of many other members of the family.

*MOORE, HENRY F. : Agricultural and Technical Education in the Colonies. In vol. xxii., "Proceedings of the Royal Colonial Institute," pp. 65-110. 8vo. 1891.

In the course of his references to education in South Africa, Mr. Moore observed that in the Cape of Good Hope "the elementary and secondary education seems based on a very excellent system," but remarked that "little is being done in the matter of technical education. . . . The Government, however, have three schools of agriculture which are already doing very good service, in various parts of the Colony," at Stellenbosch, Graham's Town, and Somerset East. It is stated that with regard to the state of education in British Bechuanaland, Natal, and Zululand, it would appear that, up to this period, no definite scheme had been adopted for agricultural or technical education in any of these colonies, but that the native schools in Natal included "industrial training" in their routine, and a knowledge of some trade was taught to all the pupils, while the mission schools paid some attention to agricultural teaching.

An account of the voyage of H.M.S. Good Hope, the first-class cruiser selected to convey Mr. Chamberlain, the Colonial Secretary, and his wife and staff, to the South African colonies on the occasion of his visit, 1902-3. The trip was commenced on November 25, 1902, and calls were made at Port Said, Suez, Aden, Mombassa, Zanzibar, and Durban, from which town Mr. Chamberlain proceeded on his tour by land, the ship continuing the voyage to Simon's Bay, via East London and Port Elizabeth. There are some statistics respecting the ship, a list of officers, and a programme of the trip, also a sketch map of Africa, showing the route taken.

A curious sequel to the publication of the above pamphlet took place a few weeks after its issue, the author having been sentenced to ninety days' imprisonment with hard labour, after being tried by Court Martial, for committing a breach of Naval Discipline, by publishing and selling the pamphlet. The case was mentioned in the House of Commons when it was stated that the Board of Admiralty had decided to remit the sentence, and on the arrival of the Good Hope at Portland, Moore was released.

drawings, and photographs. . . . Published by P. S. King . . . London, for the National Industrial Association. . . . London. xv + 194 pp. Roy. 8vo. 1902.

Mr. Morgan remarks, "There is probably no market in the world so hedged about by natural and artificial barriers, and so full of intricacies, as that of South Africa, although it promises to be one of the most fruitful in the British Empire, and this in spite of the fact of its being very largely controlled by monopolists, trusts, and 'rings.'" Attention is drawn to the fact that "the railway and shipping companies decline to arrange a system of through bookings to Africa," but it is stated that "any American or German firm can quote for the delivery of any class of goods f.o.b. at any South African port." With regard to the South African business-man, it is observed that he is "very pushful and enterprising, and does not at all appreciate the slow but sure working conservative English mind." Examples are given of the apathy and carelessness exhibited by British firms, even when their business is "very slack" and the "off-handedness" with which the British manufacturers treat their customers. Mr. Morgan is quite as emphatic as his fellow commissioner, Mr. Jenkin, on the subject of the disgraceful packing of the British manufacturers, and he refers to their stupidity in placing angular goods enveloped in straw in casks, forgetting that the space used by the straw has to be paid for. It is maintained that "Americans and Germans, the former in particular, have reduced packing to a science, and what is more, they make no charge for packing and cases, except in exceptional instances. This is highly appreciated by the merchant, and it would amply repay the British manufacturer to follow this practice." The writer considered that perhaps the most necessary and important reform to be achieved is "the reduction of freight charges from Great Britain," and he passes severe strictures on the "excessive charges, impositions, and restrictions imposed by the 'ring'." It is asserted that "Yorkshire rails and English glass have in many instances to be shipped to South Africa through German houses, in order that advantage may be taken of the lower German steamship freights," and a "highly placed Colonial official" remarked to Mr. Morgan, "It is an absolute scandal that we can get things from New York cheaper than we can from London."

*MORGAN, BEN H. : The Trade and Industry of South Africa. In vol. xxxiv., "Proceedings of the Royal Colonial Institute," pp. 130-161. 8vo. 1903.

The speaker referred to the activity lately exhibited by the Germans and Americans in pushing their business in South Africa at the first moment possible after the war, instead of waiting like the British manufacturers "until things settled down." He observed that "Trade returns . . . conclusively show that foreign trade is progressing at a much greater rate than that of Great Britain . . . the main reasons for this state of things being briefly : Lack of enterprise on the part of the British manufacturer ; want of appreciation of local conditions and requirements ; ignorance of the science of packing for export ; refusal to supply second and third grade articles ; and backwardness in standardisation." Many of the points set forth in the speaker's work entitled "Report of the Engineering Trades of South Africa" were impressed on the meeting, and Mr. Morgan emphatically condemned the shipping ring. With regard to the native question, he remarked that he thought "the people of this country will be well advised to leave the solution of this intricate problem entirely in the hands of our colonists—those who thoroughly understand the South African native, and who have had to face the social and racial issues resulting from daily contact with him.”

2. No. 12693. January 15th, 1810.

3. No. 12714. February 8th, 1810.

Each 4 pp. London. Printed and Published by John Lambert of the Strand, at the "Morning Chronicle" Office, No. 143, Strand. Folio. 1809-10.

The first paper contains an extract of a communication respecting the expedition organised by Lord Caledon, in which the writer remarks that he hoped to fall in with the party, who might be expected to soon arrive at some of the Portuguese settlements (on the West Coast). He adds, "The tribes which they have met with are peaceably inclined, and it appears not unlikely that they may in time be brought to some kind of intercourse or trade with this settlement, a circumstance which I conceive would be most beneficial to them, in spite of all that Vailant (Le Vaillant) has written, whose Hottentot Angels in a wild state were certainly fictions of his own brain."

In the second paper there is a further paragraph respecting the expedition, of which some information will be found in Theal's "History of South Africa, 1795-1834." The details as given in the Morning Chronicle do not exactly tally with Theal's account, as the latter speaks of Lieut. Donovan of the 83rd Regiment, and the former of Captain Donovan of the 32nd. According to the newspaper, the expedition actually arrived at Mozambique, and the Cape Governor received despatches from Dr. Cowan and Captain Donovan, but according to Theal the last letter of Dr. Cowan was dated December 24 (1808), a year before the approximate date of the despatch mentioned in the Daily Chronicle. In the latter it is stated that the explorers had not "in the course of their proceeding of more than a thousand leagues; discovered any real savages except the Dutch inhabitants of the frontier provinces of the Colony. Everywhere else they were received with kindness; they have found wild camels and cameleopards; and have observed very singular arrangements in the establishments of the natives, their property, the furniture of their houses, and the system of slavery which exists through the interior."

The third paper contains an account of the disappearance of "The Island of Bossen, or Penguin, sometimes called Sea Island, at the Western extremity of Table Bay." It is stated that "a convulsion was felt at Cape Town in December (1809), only two leagues distant . . . and it is supposed that the earthquake extended to Bossen." This curious account of the disappearance of Bossen or "Robben" Island is somewhat remarkable for the detailed description of the event, but there seems no ground to believe that the statement was anything more than an attempt to create a sensation.

London: Whittaker & Company. Grapel, Liverpool. vii + 144 pp. Cr. 8vo. 1844.

Morrell's work consists of a narrative of four voyages, the third of which is republished in this volume, together with some other interesting matter. The trip was undertaken in the schooner Antarctic, which left New York on June 25, 1828, and there is an account of the south-west coasts and islands, with details respecting the natural features of the places visited, and the instructions given for the navigation of the shores. There is also a description of the Cape Colony, together with some information relating to the Hottentots. Subsequently the author sailed to Angra Pequena, touching at "Possession Island" and "Ichaboe," the celebrated guano islands; he remarks of the latter that "the surface of this island is covered with bird's manure to the depth of 25 feet," but although conversant with the qualities of guano, Morell does not appear to have understood its great value, and according to Lieut. Petrie, "he seems to have been but indifferently treated by his country. He was considered an enthusiast, and his plans for opening a trade to Africa . . . were designated chimerical."

*(MOZAMBIQUE): The Documents relating to the Capture and Surrender of the Charles et Georges: a selection of all the important despatches. Translated from the Portuguese official volume. London: William Francis Graham. . . . 59 pp. 8vo. 1859.

In the year 1853, certain French subjects in the island of Reunion requested permission from the Portuguese authorities "to engage a certain number of the inhabitants of Inhambane for the purpose of making them labourers in their island of Reunion." The permission was refused, and the reasons for the decision communicated to the French Ambassador at Lisbon. The action of the Portuguese Government was taken after negotiations and correspondence with the British Government, but when Mr. Lyons McLeod, H.B.M. Consul at Mozambique, arrived at that town, he found "that the French Free Labour Emigration, and the Spanish and American Slave Trade, were carried on by the Governor-General and nearly all the officials in the Portuguese settlement on the East Coast of Africa." On November 21, 1857, Mr. McLeod informed the Governor-General that "a three-masted vessel was at anchor in Conducia Bay, and that there is reason to suppose that she is shipping a cargo of slaves." Thereupon the Portuguese sloop Zambese was sent after the suspicious vessel, which turned out to be the Charles et Georges. On November 29th she was boarded, seized, and sent to Mozambique, where she was condemned. On this, a small French war schooner was sent from Reunion to demand the restitution of the vessel. After considerable consultation and correspondence between the Portuguese and British Governments, and diplomatic negotiations between the French and Portuguese authorities, the latter decided to restore the vessel, and a circular was sent to the Portuguese Ambassadors at the various courts of Europe explaining the circumstances under which the seizure had been made. The matter is alluded to in the postscript to the Preface of the "Narrative of an Expedition to the Zambesi and its Tributaries," by David and Charles Livingstone, as proving that the Emperor Napoleon III. disregarded the assumption of Portuguese authority on the East Coast.

Many of the companies planted trees, but most of them "planted the wrong varieties. . . . The principal species of tree planted is the Blue Gum. For mining purposes this timber is practically useless. . . ." The writer remarks: "In order to inculcate the right knowledge and enthusiasm regarding trees in the Transvaal . . . a Forestry Department is required . . . which will distribute trees gratis to all applicants. . . . This practice is carried out in South Australia and Victoria by the respective Governments, and enormous numbers of trees are distributed annually."

The discussion between the two eminent professors was of a semi-academic character, and regulated from the point of view of logical, international jurists. In one important matter there is a distinct and valuable unanimity, viz. with regard to the Suzerainty question; Professor Mommsen observing that "the two Republics are de facto dependent on the English right of Protection," and that "an effective independence cannot exist for these relatively small territories. . . ." Max Müller is still more definite upon the point, basing his arguments on the fact of the recognition by the Congress of Vienna of the possessions of Great Britain in Africa, and the fact that in every convention with the Republics, articles were introduced giving them self-government, "but allowing no doubt to exist as to the Suzerainty of England," and proving the dependence of the Boer States. In his opinion, "the rising of the Boers is simply a rebellion," while Mommsen remarks, "England must settle affairs with her Celts, and French, and Dutch, and Hindus, as we must with our Poles and Danes." He further remarks that "the old obstinate religious-political fanaticism is struggling in this forgotten and lost remnant of Cape-Dutch . . . the battle is waged, so to speak, between the sixteenth and twentieth centuries." On the subject of the "Race Conflict" he says, "It would be more than reckless to decide how far the excesses of the Paramount Power or the wilfulness of the smaller State have contributed to this." With reference to the Jameson Raid, however, there is a stormy divergence of opinion. Max Müller remarks, "The truly Quixotic attempt of Jameson was entirely due to the shameful Government of the Republic," but later on admits that he was surprised and disappointed that he was not more severely punished, while as to Chamberlain, his impression was that "he will come out perfectly justified." Mommsen calls Jameson "the insignificant puppet whose name is the evil genius of England," and remarks on the Raid that "There are some scenes which revolt the moral sense of the civilised world." As to the direct causes of the war he states, "The war has broken out because the Protecting Power interfered with the internal affairs of the Republic." Max Müller denies any active interference, and says, that although "the English no doubt possessed the right to use force, they did not exercise it," and he points out that the Boers started the war by invading British territory. The pamphlet consists of two letters from Professor Max Müller and two rejoinders from Professor Mommsen, together with a postscript and notes by the former. The letters and rejoinders were originally published in the Deutsche Revue.

The work "deals with the plea or necessity of securing good and comparatively cheap labour to make the mining industry successful," and it is contended that, "By the introduction of Chinamen to supplement the imported Kaffir labour of 1903, and the first half of 1904, the increase of the gold output has surpassed all records previous to the war. It would be an incontrovertible fact that if now forty thousand labourers (either Kaffirs or Chinese) were withdrawn from employment of white men (probably to the extent of four or five thousand who receive about £1,500,000 per annum as wages alone) would necessarily and consequently cease."

Bensley; and sold by G. Nicol. . . . xviii + 392 pp. Quarto. 1789.

The author called at the Cape in September 1779, and in the second letter, dated from Madras, February 1780, there is a short account of Cape Town. It is observed that the fort and batteries "are only formidable in name, for the Dutch have very few troops to defend the settlement, five hundred regulars being the whole establishment. . . . There is no doubt that this place, in its present state of defence, might become an easy acquisition to a very inconsiderable force. Even the troops in our squadron could have put it, at the time we were there, into the possession of Great Britain, with little or no loss; nor do I believe the inhabitants would have disliked the change, for from what I could learn, their liberty is much cramped by the Dutch. I have seen no place in the course of my travels where people seem to enjoy so much domestic comfort as in this. . . . The Hollander thinks it no degradation from the character of a gentleman, upon the arrival of any foreign vessel, to convert part of his house into a tavern. By this means the stranger is instantly accommodated with bed, board, and washing for the reasonable sum of one rix-dollar per day."

The author was examined by the Army Medical Board in London in the year 1844, one of the examiners being Dr. (afterwards Sir) Andrew Smith, who was favourably impressed by his knowledge of the anatomy of snakes and fishes, subjects in which the examiner was deeply interested, particularly with regard to South Africa. Mr. Munro was duly passed, and Dr. Smith requested him, if possible, to give some assistance in the completion of his work on the zoology of South Africa, on which he was then engaged. Dr. Munro was first stationed at Graham's Town, the garrison including the 27th and 91st regiments, and he gives an interesting account of the Kaffir tribes under the chiefs Sandilli, Makoma, and Kreli, and about this time he made the acquaintance of Gordon Cumming, who is described as "a remarkably handsome, noble-looking man." There is a chapter affording some information respecting the physical geography, climate, fauna, and flora of South Africa.

This broadsheet was issued by the author during an election at Kimberley, and is mainly directed against Mr. Barney Barnato and his supporters. Dr. Murphy was badly received by the electors and was not given a hearing, whereupon he took this means of enlightening the constituency as to his views. He made a most violent attack on the Jews of the Diamond Fields, and proposed a scheme by which the Government of the Cape Colony could purchase the diamond mines, selling the diamondiferous blue clay produced, at specified periods, by public auction. Dr. Murphy found few supporters, and the poll was headed by his bitter enemy but quondam friend, Barnato.

*MURPHY, Dr. WILLIAM: To the People of Griqualand West. (Address.) By William Murphy, M.D. (Kimberley.) 4 pp. Folio. N.D. (circa 1880).

Author's signature on first page.

The address, or letter, is on the subject of the proposed annexation of Griqualand West to the Cape Colony, a measure bitterly opposed by Dr. Murphy, who was in favour of a scheme of Confederation, which should include the whole of the states and colonies of South Africa, and a separation of the Eastern and Western Provinces of the Cape Colony. He refers to the success of confederation (as exemplified in the Dominion of Canada) in allaying the racial feeling once existing in that country between the English and French, and he maintains that "the old jealousies existing between the Dutch and English races would gradually disappear" if a similar course of action were taken up in South Africa. He accuses the "London and South African Exploration Company" of endeavouring to force on the annexation of Griqualand West to the Cape Colony, an event which took place soon after the publication of the pamphlet.

The subject of the memoir was born at Douglas near Cork, in February 1820, and entered the army as a Cornet in the 15th (the King's) Hussars. He subsequently rose to the rank of a Captain, and in 1847 was despatched to the Cape of Good Hope to take part in the Kaffir "War of the Axe." Calling on Mr. Montagu, the Colonial Secretary, in Cape Town, he ascertained that Sir P. Maitland, with "the whole disposable force," was on the frontier at Graham's Town, the war being "temporarily abated in consequence of the want of supplies compelling the troops to fall back." Captain Murray joined the forces of Colonel Somerset, and acted as his aide-de-camp, and some interesting details of the march and campaign will be found in his letters to his father. He mentions that many burghers who had been called out by the Governor's proclamation deserted before the month they had to serve was up, and this caused great inconvenience and impeded operations. The campaign appears to have dragged on in a very wearisome manner, and Murray remarks that after peace was declared the officers and men soon got "disgusted with the country, which is indeed a savage one." In a letter dated March 16, 1848, it is stated, "We are now pro tem. at peace. . . . But it is absurd to suppose that, with the troops weakened to the degree they soon will be, we shall remain long at peace: the Boers on the N.E. boundary are already beginning to give trouble, while the Kaffirs are still robbing and murdering in the Colony." In the same letter it is announced, "The new town of King William's Town is being laid out in streets, &c., but as yet only a few huts or storehouses kept by Winklers (i.e. shopkeepers or settlers) have been built." On July 30, 1848, Murray wrote, "I am just on the eve of marching to Colesberg . . . the Dutch Boers, headed by the noted Pretorius . . . have again broken out and occupied the country beyond the Orange River. . . . Pretorius has a very considerable force assembled, 1200 mounted men." Captain Murray led the column with his company at the battle of Boomplaats, but was mortally wounded during the engagement, dying in hospital next day. The work contains a plan of the advance on Boomplaats copied from the Graham's Town Journal.

The chapter on "Recent Discoveries in the East and South" brings the record of travel down to the journeys of Cumming, Oswell, Galton, and Livingstone, and there are notes describing the "Social Condition of Africa" up to this period. The volume contains some maps and illustrations, and an index.

*MURRAY, MARY : The Salvation Army at Work in the Boer War. By Adjutant Mary Murray. With a prefatory note by W. Bramwell Booth. London : International Headquarters. . . . viii + 112 pp. Cr. 8vo. 1900.

The author had at first only the modest sum of £500 wherewith to carry out an organisation for the relief of the suffering in the field, and the cheering of the men in camp by the distribution of material comforts and the establishment of religious services under canvas. She appears to have achieved a great success with her limited resources, and the account she gives is very interesting, and not overweighted by a too intensely religious tone. Miss Murray decided to devote her services to the army in Natal, and proceeded there, sending other officers to Modder River, Sterkstroom, and Colesberg. Generally speaking, she seems to have received assistance in money and kind from all around her, and this evidently lightened the heavy difficulties she had to encounter. Her first quarters were at Estcourt, where, she tells us, two attempts were made by the enemy to poison the water, which had to be guarded by a picket. The author, in describing the military hospital work, says, "The weak spot in the Military Hospital System seems to me to lie in the fact that the orderlies are very often insufficiently trained." Miss Murray was in the vicinity of Colenso during the battle, and remarks, "The physical suffering was painful beyond words to witness, but infinitely greater was the shame, rage, and grief of the men—grief at the sacrifice of life, shame and rage at having received the order to retire." It is stated that wounded and dead women were discovered in the Boer trenches, and many of the incidents related are very touching. The author visited Dundee, and gives a graphic account of the systematic destruction of property by the Boers in that place.

The writer quotes copiously from Livingstone's "Missionary Travels and Researches" in order to give some account of the Boers, and remarks, "These South African land pirates should have been brought to task fifty years ago when they plundered Livingstone's house, and that of other English travellers, in 1852. If half of those marauders had been hanged when they carried Dr. Livingstone's school children into slavery, we should not have so much trouble now." Mr. Murray refers to the spectacle of "the bastard liberalism of Great Britain advocating the right of an ignorant bigoted Dutch oligarchy to ride roughshod over English, Scotch, Jews, Germans, Americans, and French who happen to go to Africa in these latter years." Included in the volume is a poem entitled "Hoch, der Kaiser," also No. 3 of "Murray's Broad-sides"—a poem entitled "Briton or Boer. A warning to the Boers and their sympathisers."

The veteran journalist's experiences include many interesting episodes in the early days of the Diamond Fields. He was one of the first to arrive at the Klipdrift Diggings, and tells many an anecdote illustrating the busy and adventurous life of the New Golconda, with considerable information respecting the early days of Kimberley, &c. &c.

A little pamphlet giving an account of Cetywayo's flight from Ulundi, his life in the bush, and his subsequent capture by the party (under the command of Lord Gifford) sent to pursue him. It appears that the king did not at first realise the significance of the battle of Ulundi, but later on he discovered that his people were thoroughly disheartened and hopeless. Details are given of the methods employed to ascertain the whereabouts of the fallen monarch from captured natives, together with particulars of Major Marter's successful search for the king. The frontispiece consists of a full-page sketch by Mr. W. H. Schröder representing Cetywayo, in native costume, on the ramparts of the Castle in Cape Town, conversing with Captain Poole, R.A.

An account of the arrival of Cetywayo in Simon's Town, Cape Colony, together with the story of his capture and subsequent events. The writer remarks, "Those critics who have so savagely attacked the policy of Sir Bartle Frere for having commenced what they assert was an uncalled-for war, could call no worse witness for their side than Cetywayo. The king does not disguise that he was playing a bold game in Zululand, and being defeated he accepts his position to-day as a natural consequence of failure." There is a graphic description of the Zulu king, Mr. Murray remarking, "In spite of his immense proportions, I never saw a finer specimen of the native races of South Africa, or amongst them so intelligent a face. . . . His limbs are certainly enormous, but they are still symmetrical, and the great breadth of chest probably prevents the corpulence from being hideous. The face is massive, open, and good-natured, and lights up quickly at a pleasant thought or humorous suggestion. . . . The eyes, large and lustrous, would—in the glance I had—indicate a restless energy and quickness of comprehension." Pasted in this copy of the pamphlet is a printed slip entitled "Cetywayo photographed," which is signed by the photographers, "Crewes & Von Laun," and gives an account of the Zulu king.

With inscription, "The Lord Esme Gordon, with the sincere regards of R. W. Murray, London, 1894."

The first part of the work, which is from the pen of Professor A. H. Keane, traces the history of South Africa from the earliest accounts of the sub-continent to the advent of the Portuguese, giving details of their discoveries and settlements, together with many quotations from the works of Barbosa, De Barros, Pigafetta, Dos Santos, Camoens, and others. The history of the Portuguese in South Africa is brought down to recent times, and there is a map showing the extent of territory claimed by them before the agreement of 1890, which claim extended from the Atlantic to the Indian Ocean, right across the continent. The narrative is continued by a compilation of extracts from "Dapper's Africa," translated and prepared by Mr. J. J. Beuzemaker, the editor contributing Chapter III., which deals with the "Settlements of the South" and their colonisation, and giving a précis of South African history from the days of Van Riebeeck to the latter part of the nineteenth century. Following these chapters are articles devoted to an account of the progress of colonisation in Bechuanaland, Mashonaland, and Matabeleland, and there is a description of the "March of the British into Mashonaland," by Mr. J. W. Ellerton Fry. There are reproductions of the celebrated maps of Africa from Pigafetta's and Dapper's works, a large map of political South Africa in 1891, a print of the fort of Cape Town and Table Bay in 1668, and a folding plate of Cape Town in 1891.

The writer remarks, "To those who have not studied the question there would seem to be something startling and revolutionary in the suggestion of a union of the several sections of South Africa on a Republican basis. But the states virtually exist as Republics at the present time. The people of the Cape Colony are to all intents and purposes Republicans, and they have much more freedom than the Transvaalers have." Mr. Murray discusses a Union of South Africa, protected by the British flag, with a Council of State to decide questions of general policy, each state retaining the management of its own affairs.

The volume was published under cover of the initials A. G. M., and consists of verses on many subjects and a long poem on the war. Mr. Musgrave states that, having been for three years a sympathetic observer of the struggle of the Cubans for independence, he proceeded to South Africa with the object of presenting the South African struggle to the American public, from the Afrikaner point of view. He observes, after a short residence in the sub-continent, "The great sympathy I had for the Boers vanished . . . a careful review of the facts will lead true Americans, as lovers of universal liberty, to realise that the only hope for South Africa lies in its federation under the almost republican constitution guaranteed by the British flag. Boer, or rather Taal, ideals are in antithesis to liberty and progress."

The first contributions consisted of seven chapters (numbered 1-7), which were followed by five articles on the Kaffir races of South Africa. See WARD, HARRIET (Editor).

A somewhat heated advocacy of the cause of the Boer and British colonists in connection with the Kaffir Wars, and the attitude of the missionaries. Most drastic methods are suggested as necessary to drive the Kaffirs across the Kei, the author remarking, "Such stringent measures will no doubt be considered very shocking by many old ladies or by the Exeter Hall gentry"—he apparently did not consider that such steps would be thought cruel or unjust by the public at large, or the colonists. Some criticism is bestowed on the past system of emigration to the Cape, and suggestions are made with regard to future efforts in this direction. The shipping of convicts to South Africa is recommended, but it is urged that they should be classified and engaged in public works, while a portion of them might be hired out to the colonists; and it is observed, that those whose characters might be considered to have been reclaimed could be formed into a "volunteer police corps."

The author states that he was impressed with the previous misgovernment of the colony, and with "the numerous wrongs it had suffered—owing chiefly to shameful intrigues and gross misrepresentations," and the work, as originally written, appears to have been a very outspoken exposé of the shortcomings of the British Government at the Cape. Some valuable information is afforded, which had been elicited from practical and successful farmers and planters in the Garden Colony, as the result of the inquiries set on foot by Mr. C. Sinclair Smith, and others went far to prove that with ordinary ability, activity, and perseverance, settlers with a capital as low as £400 could eventually secure a competence, with every prospect of becoming, in time, prosperous, and perhaps wealthy, farmers. It is stated that at this period the Government of Natal made free grants to settlers possessing a capital of £500, who had paid their own passages, of 200 acres of selected land, with the option, extending over five years, of purchasing adjacent land, to an extent of 400 acres, at 5s. an acre, those with smaller capitals receiving grants in proportion to their means.

This publication was intended to serve as a supplement to the description of the colony of Natal, written by Dr. Mann, and published in 1859. It is stated that in the short time that had elapsed since the issue of the earlier work, immense strides had been made in the colony, which had materially altered the state of affairs with regard to emigration. Reference is made to the rise in the price of land and the necessaries of life, and it is pointed out that intending emigrants had been warned that the value of land in the colony was steadily rising, year by year. Mention is made of the high wages paid to good artisans of all kinds, and it is clearly demonstrated that these men could do better in Natal than in England, and some details are given with regard to the sugar, arrowroot, coffee, and cotton plantations in the country. It is asserted that a large tract of country then known as "No Man's Land" would probably be added to the lands of the colony; and it is stated that although free grants of land had been discontinued, arrangements were still proceeding for the facilitation of emigration, and that "within the last two months 500 emigrants landed in Natal."

The pamphlet, which is signed N. N., suggests the establishment of a College or Training School at Pietermaritzburg for the qualification of teachers and of instructors, and for the gratuitous instruction of natives. It is proposed that the education should be technical and industrial, as well as literary.

Saturday, July 16th, 1842.

Despatches from Capt. J. C. Smith, who was in command of the British troops at Port Natal during the hostilities with the emigrant Boers, and from Colonel Cloete, who carried out the relief of the garrison. The report of the former summarised the events which occurred between his despatch of May 25th and his relief a month later, and states, "The resistance on the part of the farmers since my arrival has been universal, those few who professed themselves friendly having carefully abstained from giving assistance, in most cases using that profession as a convenient screen for the purpose of hiding their disaffection from observation. All the property of the English residents the Boers plundered and sent to Pietermaritzburg." Colonel Cloete details the measures adopted by him for the relief of the British troops, and gives an account of his engagement with the Boers. He highly commends the gallantry with which "Capt. Smith defended his post for a whole month, under no ordinary circumstances of privation." Among the enclosures is a letter in which mention is made of Mr. Pretorius' communications to Colonel Cloete with regard to the handing over, on his part, of the country to the King of the Netherlands; the reply to Pretorius is given in full, and in it he was told, "You cannot be so ignorant as not to know that Port Natal has always been a dependency" of the Colony of the Cape of Good Hope.

*(NATAL): (GEBUZA): The Peril in Natal, by Gebuza. London: T. Fisher Unwin. 29 pp. 8vo. 1906.

The writer deprecates the constant apprehensions of the white inhabitants of a native outbreak, on the score of the preponderance of the black population, and it is remarked that "the actual experience of the Natal Colonist is uniformly fatal to that theory of peril to the Whites, which has proved in the past to be a source of deadly peril to the Blacks." Allusion is made to the three panics of 1861, 1873, and 1879, the author evidently considering that the outbreak of 1906 might be classed with the earlier panics in having been partly precipitated by scaremongers.

General and up-to-date information respecting the colony is provided, but it is asserted that many of the statements "must be qualified by a consideration of the circumstances of the war in South Africa." It is stated that "out of the twelve million acres in the colony, a large area, estimated in 1900 at 1,153,400 acres, remains undisposed of. In 1898, nearly 109,000 acres were sold at an average price of 13s. 3d. an acre, payable by instalments. With the exception of isolated patches in Victoria country, which are suited for the cultivation of sugar, the remaining Crown Lands of the Colony are remote from centres of population and from lines of railways, and are suited for pastoral purposes only."

The map in this edition includes the two new provinces of Utrecht and Vryheid, taken from the Transvaal, and annexed to the colony of Natal, after the close of the South African War, in the year 1903, giving the colony an additional area of 7000 square miles. It is stated that the new district "is said to contain minerals, and its resources will be opened up by the new railway which connects Dundee with Vryheid." It is also announced that "Land in Zululand will shortly be available for settlement by Europeans."

A most interesting account of the social life of Natal at this period, with much information respecting the position of the Colony. The author states that a gentleman who had lived in "Kafirland" nearly thirty years informed her that he was "personally acquainted with some of the descendants of the unhappy women" wrecked in the Grosvenor, "who were forced into marriage with the native chieftains, some of which descendants . . . were born bereft of reason."

It is observed that "His Excellency the Governor of the Cape of Good Hope (Major-General George Thomas Napier), having considered it expedient, in consequence of the proceedings of the emigrant farmers, to take military possession of Port Natal," despatched "a detachment of the 72nd Highlanders, a proportion of the Royal Artillery, with three 12-pounder howitzers and two 12-pounders" for that purpose. It is stated that the troops were embarked at Table Bay and were under the command of Major Charters, and that they landed at Port Natal, without meeting any resistance, on December 3, 1838. The proclamation issued by the Governor, while clearly asserting that the "occupation shall be purely military and of a temporary character," expresses the determination "to seize the said harbour of Port Natal, to erect a fort therein, and to seize as much of the territory surrounding the same . . . as shall be necessary . . . to keep the possession of the same in Her Majesty's name until otherwise directed by Her Majesty's Government." In the "Instructions to the officer in command of Her Britannic Majesty's Fort, called Fort Victoria, in the harbour of Port Natal in South Africa," dated November 18, 1838 (see Bird's "Annals of Natal," vol. i. pp. 426), it is maintained that "the right of occupancy of Port Natal, if any such right can be said to exist, belongs to the Crown of Great Britain, and is derived from the former Dutch Government of the Colony of the Cape, to which it was transferred by the Portuguese, its original possessors." There is a short account of the harbour, and a small map of "Port Natal and the country adjacent," together with some description of the same, notes on the position taken up by the detachment, and on the fort, hospital, and commissary's store, &c. &c.

Prince Alfred, better known as the Duke of Edinburgh, who afterwards became the Duke of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha, paid his first visit to South Africa in August 1860. He proceeded to Natal from the Cape Colony on horseback, travelling several hundred miles in this manner. After arriving at the border, he rode a further 130 miles in three days, when he reached Maritzburg, where he was met by Sir George Grey and the Bishop of Natal. He laid the foundation-stone of the New Town Hall, and was entertained at a war dance performed by two thousand natives under the chiefs Ngoza and Zatchuke, who presented him with an address which was read by Mr. Shepstone, then Secretary for Native Affairs. Next day the Prince rode to Durban, where he was present at a dance given by the municipality, in which he took part in spite of his ride of fifty-four miles that day. The pamphlet contains a view of Maritzburg and a portrait of the two Kaffir chiefs.

The treatise was published with a view of stating "clearly, concisely, and plainly, the legal effect of war on a few of the many relationships that arise, in the course of business transactions, between private individuals." Particulars are given with regard to the laws dealing with the offence of "trading with the enemy," and to "confiscation" justified by law in times of war. It is stated that "it will be difficult to obtain compensation for property actually used by the Boer Governments or their agents, especially as, upon the annexation of the Republics, all the rights and liabilities appertaining to such territory pass to the British Crown. It can scarcely be expected that the British Government will be held reliable for acts which tended to the advantage of the States with which it was at war."

A Report of a Public Meeting jointly convened by the Aborigines Protection Society and the British and Foreign Anti-Slavery Society, which was held at Caxton Hall, Westminster, on 29th April, 1903. London: P. S. King & Son. . . . 20 pp. 8vo. 1903.

The principal resolution was proposed by Sir T. Fowell Buxton, who moved "that this meeting, in view of the demand which has been made for the application of pressure to compel natives to work in the Transvaal mines, appeals to His Majesty's Government to prevent resort to any form of compulsion, by excessive taxation or otherwise, and to ensure for the natives of British South Africa freedom in disposing of their labour, and the immunity from any approach to slavery to which they are entitled as subjects of the British Crown." The speakers strongly opposed any attempt being made to compel the natives of South Africa to work, and considered it preferable that certain mines should go without labour rather than any system of forced labour should prevail. Sir Brampton Gurdon dilated on "the new theory . . . that the native, having very few wants, and being able to live comfortably without much work, is apt to get into mischief, and that it is an actual kindness to tax him, and in other ways put pressure on him in order to teach him the dignity of labour." He compared the case of the native with that of other inhabitants of the world, "entitled to live in ease and comfort on their private means," and remarked that the Chancellor of the Exchequer had not as yet resorted to their special taxation on the same grounds.

The members of the committee, through whose exertions this volume was compiled, "had been long interested in the welfare of the natives of South Africa," and made every effort "to collect accurate information with regard to their social and economical condition." The list of the committee's informants and correspondents shows that great care has been taken to obtain statistics and information from a large number of well-known South Africans of considerable experience, and the volume may be regarded as a standard work on the condition of the natives of the sub-continent at the commencement of the twentieth century. The scope of the volume includes a description of the coloured races to be found in the various colonies of South Africa, with an account of their laws, customs, and system of land tenure, and there are chapters which discuss the labour question, the occupations and wages of the natives, together with remarks on the compound system, the law of master and servant, the pass laws, education, taxation, &c. &c.

“The Transvaal Question” is divided into three parts:—

1. Its history.
2. The Uitlanders.
3. The Negotiations.

M. Naville states, “Kruger himself has succeeded in taking the position of an autocratic monarch. In the Raad his authority is complete. . . . Further, when he pleases, he sets the Grondwet aside.” He remarks that the President of the Transvaal received an income of 175,000 francs (and extras), while the President of the Swiss Confederation only received 15,000 francs. Mention is made of the enormous amounts voted for secret service, and the extravagance of the country in fees and salaries.

M. Naville states that he recommended “the partisans of the Boers . . . six months ago, when the South African storm was brewing . . . to yield on the question of franchise,” and he maintained that Dr. Leyds’ mission to Europe “contributed to force the Boers into war,” as he propagated the illusion “that Europe and America would never allow the South African Republics to founder.” The writer remarks that in reply to Mr. Wessels’ assertion, “We may be defeated but we shall never be subdued,” he would advise that the inhabitants of the Republics should not be urged “to desperate resolutions,” and they should be enabled to “try the liberty their conqueror offers them.”

The author, in discussing the prolongation of the war, states that Kruger, assisted by Steyn, had rendered war inevitable, and remarks that those who sympathised with the Boers should direct their attention to the unfortunate people who wished to lay down their arms, rather than to those leaders (meneurs), who (with the exception of Steyn), after plunging their country into war and their fellow-citizens into ruin, weep over the misfortunes of their native land in the best hotels in Paris, Brussels, and the Hague.

Mr. Naylor admits that those "who are opposing the introduction of Asiatic labour have not been helped by the cry of slavery which has been raised at home," and he asserts that the mine owners are bent on getting 100,000 labourers; "and they know that the only way to do this will be to treat the first arrivals well." Indeed, it would appear from the report that the Chinese obtained luxuries that they never could have had before in their lives, and the question is asked why "a little of the enormous sums spent in making the Chinese comfortable was not spent in order to induce English labourers to come out?"

*NEDERBURGH, S. C. : Verhandeling over de Vragen : of, en in hoe verre, het nuttig en noodzakelijk zijn zoude, de Oost Indische bezittingen van deezen staat, ofte sommigen derzelve, te brengen op den voet der West Indische volkplantingen ; en of, en in hoe verre, het voordeelijker voor dit gemeenebest, en desselfs ingezeeten, zijn zoude den handel op voormelde bezittingen bij aanhoudenheid door eene uitsluitende compagnie te drijven, dan wel die voor allen's lands ingezeeten open to stellen ; en in dit laatse geval : op welke voorwaarden, en onder welke bepalingen ; door Mr. C. S. Nederburgh, voorheen commissaris generaal over geheel Nederlandsch Indien, en de Kaap de Goede Hoop. In's Haage, bij Vosmaer en Zoonen. Pp. 8, 252. 8vo. 1802.

Treatises on the Questions :—

As to whether, and to what extent, it would be advantageous and profitable to bring the East Indian Possessions of the State, or some of them, to the same standard as the West Indian Colonies ;

And whether, and to what extent, it would be better for the Commonwealth itself to build up the trade of the said possessions by means of a company with exclusive trading rights, or to throw open the trade to all countries ; and in the last case, under what conditions and stipulations.

By S. C. Nederburgh, late Commissioner-General of the whole of the Netherlands Indian possessions, and the Cape of Good Hope.

Mr. Theal remarks ("History of South Africa, 1691-1795") that there "are only a few pages of the book devoted" to the Cape Colony, and that "these contain little beyond several comments on the burghers, and some remarks on the introduction and production of merino wool." Mr. Nederburgh and Mr. Simon Hendrik Frykenius were appointed joint Commissioners-General of the Cape of Good Hope, where they arrived on June 18, 1792. They greatly reduced the expenditure, but imposed new taxes, and in consequence were not popular with the colonials, but they "claimed that the benefits which they conferred . . . greatly outweighed the burdens imposed by the increased taxation."

Theal remarks ("History of South Africa, 1691-1795"), "The items in this work of greatest interest to a student of Cape history are some official documents connected with the arrival of Admiral Elphinstone's fleet in Simon's Bay in 1795, and the subsequent intercourse between the English and Dutch officers."

Nees von Esenbeck was a German botanist who was born near Erbach in 1786, and who possessed considerable information respecting the "Cape Hepaticae," and other South African species. He wrote a joint work on Cape Hepaticology in conjunction with Karl Moritz Gottsche & J. B. W. Lindenberg, which was published in Hamburg, 1844-47. In 1848 he entered political life, thereby losing his position as Professor, and he eventually died in poverty in 1858. His younger brother, Theodor Ludwig, was also recognised as a botanist of some distinction.

Examination of the "narrative of events" by A. J. Sluysken, defending the conduct of the Cape Burghers.

The surrender of the Dutch troops under Commissioner Sluysken and Colonel Gordon to the British forces under General Craig (September 16, 1795) was greatly resented by the Burghers, and, according to Theal ("History of South Africa, 1691-1795"), "Dutch writers, when relating the surrender of the Colony, have usually charged Commissioner Sluysken and Colonel Gordon with imbecility, or with downright treason. . . . No opposition surely was ever so strong in words, so weak in deeds, as that which ended in the capitulation of the Cape Colony to the English troops."

The author observed that "every right-thinking man had a certain amount of sympathy with Paul Kruger and his country until the President finally said, 'No paramountcy; no Suzerainty.' Then the tie broke; the sympathy disappeared. . . ." He accuses certain of the Cape rulers of Her Majesty's colony (the Cape) of doing everything "to assist Kruger to make the last preparations for the war that they had helped to foster, while they worked might and main to keep the frontier towns in a state of weakness, so that they might fall an easy prey to the enemy." It is stated that, in spite of the demand of the people of Mafeking for help, more than a month before the outbreak of war, "not a single modern gun had been shifted up to the little frontier town," and all they had to depend on were "four 7-pounder muzzle-loading guns of ancient date . . . guns that had grown old in service before the Boer war was fought in the seventies," and which were to hold the town against modern artillery of the most up-to-date pattern. There is an interesting account of the siege, the bombardment, the life in the trenches, Eloff's attack and capture, and the relief of the town, all of which are described with considerable vigour and spirit. High praise is given to Colonel Baden-Powell, on whom it is said the natives bestowed the Kaffir name signifying "the wolf that never sleeps," and the "protectorate regiment is spoken of with enthusiastic appreciation." The besieging Boers, with the exception of Eloff, are commented on in unfavourable terms, especially their leader, Snyman, who is accused of firing on buildings flying the red cross flag.

Mr. Newbigging did not form a favourable opinion of the Boers, and he remarks that while travelling in the Transvaal he frequently outspanned "in the vicinity of Boer farmsteads . . . but in no instance did we receive a kindly salutation or even a pleasant look from the denizens . . . this be it remembered was long before the Jameson Raid." There are some "reflections" on the state of the Transvaal in 1900, the author remarking that the name given to the Transvaal, i.e. "The South African Republic," was "an impertinence and a menace . . . and affords the key to unbounded pretensions which the Boer leaders cherished deep down in their hearts."

A full account of the campaign by a war correspondent who was well acquainted with the country, and had a good knowledge of the natives and their language and customs. The author traverses the statement so often made that Sir Bartle Frere "caused the war," and maintains that the difficulty which culminated in the hostilities had existed a quarter of a century before the High Commissioner arrived in South Africa, and that later on it became abundantly evident that Cetuywayo had been actively preparing for war. The volume contains a large military map of Zululand, a portrait of Cetuywayo (very dissimilar to the majority of other delineations of the Zulu king), several plans of forts and battlefields, and a number of appendices, amongst which will be found an account of the Court Martial on Lieutenant Carey in connection with the death of the Prince Imperial.

vaal and Orange Free State in 1880-1. . . . London: Wm. Allen & Co. . . . xvi + 387 pp. 8vo. 1882.

An account of the Boer War of 1880-1, together with some preliminary chapters referring to the history of the South African Colonies and Republics up to this period. The author expresses the hope that the publication of the volume will conduce "to the development of a more liberal feeling towards our future colonists, the Boers—the early pioneers of civilisation, colonisation, and European dominion in South Africa." He considered that the causes of the war were due partially "to the peculiarities and untractableness of the Boers themselves; but, principally, to the undoubted mismanagement and wilful blindness of the Imperial authorities both at home and out here, as evidenced by the various and contradictory policies pursued by successive governors."

*NEWMAN, CHARLES L. NORRIS-: Matabeleland, and How we got it. With notes on the occupation of Mashonaland, and an account of the 1893 campaign by the British South Africa Company, the adjoining British territories and protectorates. . . . With sketch map and plans of the fights. London: T. Fisher Unwin. xii + 241 pp. 8vo. 1895.

Prefaced by a chapter on "The Rush for Africa," the author commences his work with a short sketch of the rise of the Matabele nation, their contests with the Boers, Basutos, and Zulus, and the military progress of the country under Moselekatse. The account of the early concessionaires under Lobengula is given with considerable detail, and is interesting as showing the methods which eventually led to the occupation of the entire country. Among other pioneers, the name of Sir J. Swinburne is mentioned, of whom it is related that he made an offer, somewhere in the sixties, of £160,000 for the entire mineral rights of the Transvaal, which, avers the author, was only rejected on account of the opposition of one single member of the executive of the impecunious republic. It is remarked that many of the early settlers in Rhodesia stated "that they were not treated at all well by the British South Africa Company," who, they asserted, did not fulfil the promises made to them as an inducement to undertake such a long and risky journey, and so difficult a mission. There is a chapter on British Bechuanaland and Khama's country, which relates the history of the various intrigues of Boers and Britons for the acquisition of this territory. Full accounts are given of the Chartered Company's concessions, with the names of the people who acquired them, and a full list of the first officials who took possession of the country, and there is a résumé of the various matters which led up to the Matabele War and the death of Lobengula. The author refers to the alleged slanders upon the Chartered Company with respect to their conduct of the war, and their treatment of the wounded and prisoners, and states that "it may be taken for granted that in no campaign against Kaffirs in recent years has so little cruelty, want of feeling, and loss of life occurred." A detailed description of the war is afforded, including the disaster to Major Allan Wilson and his men, and the pursuit of the King, and Mr. Newman criticises Major Forbes for not having sent every available man to Wilson's relief, which, he asserts (on the authority of Burnham, the scout, and other officers), could have been carried out if this course had been pursued.

The notes give some information respecting some Kaffir and Zulu chiefs and their tribes. In the same "compendium" will be found personal notes on a large number of Kaffir chiefs, circa 1855 (pp. 128-136).

*(NICHOLSON, CAPTAIN) : A Subaltern's Sick Leave, or rough notes of a visit in search of health to China and the Cape of Good Hope. . . . By Lieut. Nicolas Polson, of the Bengal Native Infantry. Calcutta : G. H. Hutmann, Bengal Mily. Orphan Press. 166 pp. 8vo. 1837.

The work was issued in two parts, of which the latter, consisting of eighty-nine pages, is devoted to the Cape of Good Hope. The information afforded is in the main correct, and the observations and critical remarks of the writer are presented in a lively and entertaining manner. The author made some stay in Cape Town and his notes on the Dutch colonists are very interesting. He observes of them, "Dutch they still are and will long remain, though the colony has now been thirty-one years in the possession of the British." Attention is drawn to the fact that the Dutch and other natives of Cape Town call themselves "Kapenaars," and that they style other native white inhabitants of the colony "Afrikaanders." With regard to the charge of lack of virtue sometimes preferred against the Dutch ladies, it is remarked that "virtue is just as common among them as it can be among a class totally devoid of anything like education and almost without the knowledge that infidelity is a crime." The author was struck by the total absence of any ideas on the subject of domestic and political economy among the Boers, and he states that none of them would ever sell his grain or wool at home at less than the absolutely highest market price prevailing, irrespective of the fact that he might have to take up his own time and that of his servants and his waggon and oxen in bringing it to market. It is stated that certain of the missionaries greatly exaggerated the reports of the cruelty of the colonists to the natives, and in describing Dr. Philip it is asserted that he was "one whose talents and powers of persuasion would do honour to the most glorious cause, but whose conduct would disgrace the worst." The writer gives an account of a journey by ox waggon to the north-east frontier of the colony, with descriptions of the towns and villages passed on the way to Graham's Town. He made a detour to Knysna and Plettenberg's Bay, and there are some notes upon the game animals and birds of the colony, and of the beasts of prey still prevalent in South Africa, at this period.

Note.—According to Fairbridge and Noble's Catalogue (1886), the author of the above volume was Captain Nicholson, an officer in the service of the Honourable East India Company, and in referring to the work Theal remarks ("History of South Africa, 1795-1834"), "the name of Polson is probably fictitious."

*NICHOLSON, GEORGE: The Cape and its Colonists: with Hints to Settlers. By George Nicholson, Jun., Esq., a late resident. London: J. & D. A. Darling. . . . vii + 219 pp. 8vo. 1849.

Mr. Nicholson came out to the country with every intention of permanently settling there, and he purchased a farm of 35,000 acres, with a small homestead, for £2000, the property being considered one of the best in the district of Graaff-Reinet. Finding, however, that the discomforts of the life in the veld were too much for his wife, he handed over the farm to his brother, and proceeded to Cape Town, and subsequently to England.

During his residence in Cape Town, and in the course of his journeys, the author saw a good deal of the Cape Colony. He frequently refers to what he evidently considered the exaggerated account of the prosperity of the Cape farmers published by Mr. Chace in the volume entitled "The Cape of Good Hope, &c., 1843," and he observes that the latter did not think fit to publish in the Gazette particulars of "the insolvency, ruin, and selling up . . . of the very meritorious and enterprising individuals," of whose prosperity he had been an exponent only a few months previously; he goes on to say that the failure of these men was simply due "to the profitless nature of the occupation, on an extensive scale, in this country." Mr. Nicholson deprecates the efforts of the Colonial missionaries, and asserts that he never could find a single so-called convert "who could give . . . an intelligent answer even on the first principles of their adopted creed."

With regard to the Boers, it is maintained that "the hasty, fanatical, and oppressive manner in which the emancipation of the slaves was conducted" in the Cape Colony, had converted "these previously loyal subjects into bitter enemies," who "most bitterly reprobated the exaggeration and falsehood which had . . . been spread abroad on their general treatment of the coloured races, by interested missionaries, and other purveyors of horrors."

*NICHOLSON, GEORGE: Fifty Years in South Africa: Being some Recollections and Reflections of a Veteran Pioneer. By G. Nicholson. Illustrated. London: W. W. Greener. xv + 273 pp. 12mo. 1898.

In a Preface which is dated from Robertson, Cape Colony, the author states that he left England for the Cape in 1844, and he gives a short sketch of the colony at this period, together with some information concerning the "little Boer Republics in an embryonic and tentative condition, in the territories now known as the Orange Free State and Transvaal. . . ."

Mr. Nicholson bought a farm near the Sneeberg range of mountains and stocked it, but after two years sold it at a profit and "cleared out for the interior," and he affords an account of his hunting expeditions, in the course of which he came in contact with Gordon-Cumming (whom he constantly alludes to as Cummings), Oswell, and David Livingstone.

There is a very abusive chapter respecting the Diamond Fields, which contains a fierce attack on David Arnot, who is stated to have been "an illegitimate son of a former Chief Justice in the Cape, called Menzies, by a sable dam." The author accuses Arnot of converting Waterboer "from a decent respectable man into a sodden, idiotic inebriate," and remarks that, although Gladstone and his "Little England Party" were "bitterly averse to colonial extension," they annexed Griqualand West as a kind of advertisement "to obtain an accession of popularity and votes." With regard to the Transvaal, he observes that it is simply absurd that "the most narrow-minded and ignorant people on the face of the earth should be allowed to occupy a position . . . of control over interests in the country worth at least 95 per cent. of those of the Boers."

A description of the game animals, birds, and ferae of South Africa, adapted for the use of sportsmen, and "the less advanced students of the natural history of that country." The work sets forth "in a simple and practical way . . . the methods adopted in the discovery and pursuit of every description of animal indigenous to that portion of Africa south of the Zambesi which is likely to show sport, including . . . the game birds . . . together with some of its fresh-water and sea-fish. . . ." The volume is illustrated with a number of plates, and affords valuable hints regarding equipment, preservation of specimens, &c. &c.

The volume contains chapters entitled "South Africa," pp. 113-128, and "Hunting in Portuguese East Africa," pp. 129-179, and the author visited Natal, the Transvaal, the Cape Colony, and other parts of the sub-continent. Mr. Niedieck's sympathies were evidently with the Boers, but he remarks that "financially and economically speaking, it will be an advantage to the world at large if the Transvaal and the Orange Free State find themselves under the banner of John Bull . . . the English are colonists compared with whom all other nations, except perhaps the Dutch, are nothing but miserable blundersers."

Johan Nieuhof was born at Elsen in Westphalia in 1630, and entered the service of the Dutch West India Company as a supercargo ; later he took up a position in the Dutch East India Company's service and was sent to Batavia, and he accompanied an embassy to China, returning to Amsterdam in 1658. He was Governor of Ceylon from 1662 to 1667. In 1671 he proceeded to the East on a new mission, and he visited the Cape in 1672, but landing at Madagascar, five months later he disappeared while on the island, and was never heard of again. There is an account of the Cape and the Hottentots in Vol. II., pp. 16-18, together with a large double map of the Cape Peninsula. The map is illustrated with views of Table Mountains, ships, animals, &c. &c. An English edition of this work will be found in Churchill's Voyages, 1732.

A tale of the Rand and other parts of South Africa in the troublous times which, following the Jameson Raid, ended with the South African War (1899-1902). A lively picture of Johannesburg is drawn, but there is a large amount of exaggeration respecting the treatment of the British in the Transvaal.

An account of an eight months' trip to the Orange Free State and the Transvaal, &c., 1877-8.

Mr. Nixon made some stay at Cape Town, visiting the surrounding country, and he mentions that he met Mr. Burgers, the ex-President of the extinct South African Republic, who denied that he had accepted a pension from the British Government.

He subsequently proceeded to Bloemfontein, via Beaufort, Richmond, and Colesberg, and he gives many particulars with respect to the Orange Free State and President Brand. He also visited the Diamond Fields, but was not charmed with Kimberley, and he remarks, "The whole town gives the impression of having been built with the idea of being prepared for removal at a moment's notice. . . . Nobody talks of living there ; nobody thinks of it as a place to live in, but only as a place to make money at, and then get away." Returning to Bloemfontein, Mr. Nixon decided to visit the Transvaal, and journeyed to Pretoria in an ox-waggon. He states that "the influx of European settlers was gradually improving the old-fashioned Boer off the face of the country," and he remarks that the "barbarous and uncouth dialect . . ." in general use "was giving place to English."

The introductory chapters deal with the early history of the Cape, and the policy of the British Government in South Africa. Mr. Nixon was in Pretoria during the siege (1880-1), and he gives a vivid account of the reception of the news of the British Government's decision to abandon the Transvaal. He speaks indignantly and bitterly of the grief and distress of the British inhabitants, and remarks, "I saw men crying like children with shame and despair. Some went raving up and down that they were Englishmen no longer ; others . . . declared against treachery which had misled them into a useless sacrifice . . . as I recall to mind the weeping men and women, the infuriated volunteers, and the despairing farmers and storekeepers, half crazy with the sense of wounded national honour, and the prospect of loss and ruin before them, my blood boils within me. . . ."

The official position of the author, and his personal acquaintance with the Cape Colony, particularly fitted him for the task of preparing this work, which affords an accurate view of the country at the commencement of the last quarter of the nineteenth century. The main objects of the publication, as set forth in the Preface, were "to present an impartial account of the aspect and condition of the various divisions of the Colony; to inform the reader of its liberal land laws, its agricultural and pastoral resources, its mineral wealth, its industries, and its commercial progress; and thus to direct attention to the favourable field it offers for the profitable employment of intelligent industry and moderate capital." In addition to the large amount of information thus provided, there is a folding lithographic view of the Table Bay Breakwater and of Cape Town Docks, an illustration of the Port Elizabeth Market Square and Town Hall, and a map of South Africa corrected up to the time of issue.

This compilation affords a continuous narrative of everything "that is most noticeable in the Political History of the Colonies and States of South Africa" down to the first annexation of the Transvaal in 1877. The work is concise and unbiassed, and should be suitable as a "Reader" for educational classes and a manual for schools.

After a short general account of South Africa, embracing the whole of the British Colonies and the Orange Free State, the author gave an interesting description of Zululand, the Zulus, and the war. The discussion on the paper was led by Sir Henry Barkly, who, in remarking on the adverse and unjust criticisms which were being passed on statesmen in South Africa at this period, said that with regard to the aspersions on the Cape Government for its apparent lukewarmness in the Zulu affair, "there cannot be a greater mistake than to make such a charge." The Rev. Horace Waller,

Mr. (afterwards Sir) Donald Currie, Sir J. Coode, Sir J. Anderson, and the Hon. Cecil Ashley all took part in the debate, the latter observing, "The past history of a man like Sir Bartle Frere, one whose whole life has been spent in the service of his country, and who has ever been distinguished by his judgment, his ability, and his high sense of duty, should have some weight in influencing the opinion of his countrymen. Let us therefore pass no judgment or censure until the whole case is before us."

The volume was prepared "at the request of the Committee appointed by the Government for the representation of the (Cape) Colony at the Colonial and Indian Exhibition to be held in London during the . . . year 1886." The editor comments on the progress made by the country since the publication, eleven years previously, "of the first Descriptive Handbook of the Cape Colony." There are several coloured illustrations, including folding views of Cape Town and Table Bay, and Port Elizabeth and Algoa Bay, a view of the Kimberley Mine, a Map of the Cape Colony, &c. &c. &c.

London : Sampson Low, Marston, Searle & Rivington. . . . x+307 pp. Cr. 8vo. 1880.

The author states that, in compiling this volume, he consulted no published work with the exception of Döhne's Zulu-Kaffir Dictionary, but he acknowledges his indebtedness to the Rev. Mr. Robertson of Zululand for much information afforded as to the rise, progress, habits, and customs of the Zulu nation. Mr. Norbury went through the campaign with the Gaikas and Galekas, 1877-78, and gives an account of the social life of these tribes, together with a description of the climate, fauna, and flora of Kaffraria, and notes on the geological features of the country.

In an account of the war with Krelî and his people, it is stated that among the circumstances that contributed to prolonging the war were "the complete freedom which we permitted the enemy's women to enjoy, and the liberty we accorded to the so-called loyal Kaffirs." The writer met the white Zulu chief, John Dunn, whom he describes as a "sunburnt, good-looking man in the prime of life," and he asserts that Cetuywayo always had an antipathy to missionaries; the King maintaining that a "Christian Zulu is a spoiled Zulu."

A sketch of the South African War, compiled from a variety of sources, in order to supply what is represented to be "an impartial account from a military point of view." The writer discusses the "causes that brought on the war," which he states was engaged in to "settle for ever the question of supremacy in South Africa," and he maintains that "locally . . . the war of 1899-1900 was just as necessary to South Africa as the French Revolution of 1793 was to Europe." The volume follows the campaigns of Generals Methuen, Gatacre, and Buller, and there is an account of the siege and relief of Ladysmith. Amongst the appendices will be found the Majesfontein (Magersfontein), Stormberg, and Tugela and Spion Kop despatches.

A bright little sketch of the investment and relief of the Diamond City. Referring to the conduct of the operations by the Boers, it is remarked that "Many men took their wives and families to the redoubts . . . because they were almost the only places against which the shells were not directed . . . in the main the Boers avoided them . . . and confined their efforts to the killing of women and children. When once this and similar facts are made known in England, it is to be hoped that we shall hear less of the 'courage' and 'piety' of the Boers. They besieged a town defended by a mere handful of regulars, a few volunteers, and a number of citizens armed for the occasion, for more than sixteen weeks without venturing a single assault on it." There is a "copy of the Proclamation issued by Lieut.-Colonel Kekewich on October 15, 1899," declaring Kimberley to be in a state of siege and establishing a "Special Court of Summary Jurisdiction."

xliii + 383 pp. 8vo. 1881.

Frank Oates was born near Leeds on April 6, 1840, and was educated at Oxford. After a tour in the Rocky Mountains he formed a plan for an expedition to visit the Zambesi Falls via Natal, and accompanied by his brother, Mr. W. E. Oates, sailed for South Africa in March 1873. The brothers fitted out their expedition at Maritzburg, and travelled through the Transvaal and Bechuanaland, visiting the Tati district, soon after which Mr. W. E. Oates returned to England. Frank Oates proceeded to Bulawayo, and he gives an interesting account of Matabeleland at this period. He was well received by Lobengula, who gave him considerable assistance, but owing to many delays he made several unsuccessful attempts to reach the falls, and did not arrive there till the last day of the year 1874; soon after which he was attacked by fever, and died on the return journey to Tati early in February 1875. His account of Matabeleland is one of the best of the earlier modern works on the country, and the volume possesses a number of coloured and chromo plates, a portrait of Mr. Oates, and several maps and other illustrations. The appendices contain an article on South African Ethnology by Dr. George Rolleston, and catalogues and descriptions of the ornithological, botanical, and entomological collections formed by Mr. Oates.

Selected chiefly from his diary. By the Rev. James O'Haire. Dublin: Cooke, Keatinge & Co., 11 Lower Dominick Street. Pp. 605, 20, 20. 8vo. 1877.

An account of the labours and travels of the author, a Roman Catholic missionary in South Africa. The volume contains a description of many of the towns and villages in the Western Province of the Cape Colony at this period, with notes on the climate of South Africa, and much information respecting the natives, of whom Mr. O'Haire remarks, "The Kaffirs are brave and intelligent, the Corrannas wicked, the Bushmen savage, the Hottentots degraded; but I believe them all capable of civilisation, knowledge, and religion." There is a "History of Catholicity in South Africa," with particulars of the lives of the two first Catholic Bishops, and a mass of correspondence, mainly on religious subjects.

A curious episode is related with reference to the death of Mr. James Chapman, author of "Travels in the Interior of South Africa." It is stated that Chapman had been under the spiritual charge of Mr. O'Haire, who had remonstrated with him respecting his connection with the Masonic Order. Chapman replied by publishing a pamphlet entitled "The Priest and the Freemason," in which a severe attack was made on the clergy of the Roman Catholic Church. Soon after, Chapman went to the Diamond Fields, where he subsequently died. A dispute arose about his burial between the Roman Catholic priest and the Freemasons, and finally the former retired.

Note.—The letter from the Rev. J. W. Rickard respecting Chapman's death is dated New Rush (Kimberley), April 3, 1868, but this is manifestly an error, as the "New Rush," by which name Kimberley was first known, did not exist at that date. I therefore examined the old register of St. Mary's Church, Kimberley, from which it appears that James Chapman died on February 6, 1872. The priest in charge appears to have made a record of what occurred at the grave, and the dispute between the Roman Catholic clergyman and the Freemasons is alluded to, it being asserted that the minister could not perform the ceremony owing to the presence of the Masons in regalia; eventually, it is stated, Mr. Rickard, the Protestant minister, said some prayers over the grave. It is further asserted that Chapman made a retraction of his errors before his death, the document being witnessed by Henry Chapman, Mr. Scott, and Mr. Vaughan.—S. M.

This brochure was published privately and anonymously, but it was an open secret that it was attributed to Major O'Meara, R.E., the chief Intelligence Officer acting under Major Kekewich during the investment and defence of Kimberley. The author severely criticises the attitude adopted by Mr. Rhodes towards the military authorities, and gives details respecting a violent scene which took place between the former and Colonel Kekewich, in the course of which the Colonial statesman is represented as having lost control of his temper, and to have used excessively violent and insulting language to the Military Governor of Kimberley. There is an interesting account of the siege, and many particulars are afforded which are not met with in other publications on the subject.

*OMOND, G. W. T. : The Boers in Europe. A sidelight on history. London : Adam & Charles Black. 277 pp. Cr. 8vo. 1903.

This work purposes to give an account of the intrigues carried on by Dr. Leyds and his "Chancellerie de la Republique Sud Africaine," and their pro-Boer friends in England and the continent, for the purposes of belittling Great Britain, and to assist in gaining the independence of the Boers. It is stated that Mr. Kruger had long been warned of the danger of Dr. Leyds' policy, and that in July 1899 Mr. J. Van Der Merve wrote to him saying "Dr. Leyds' diplomacy is condemned. His game is to play off our young state against England with the Great Powers of the continent. This is a fatal mistake." It is pointed out that the burghers were encouraged by the influence of stay-at-home warriors to carry on a hopeless contest, and that even after peace was signed, Reitz, with perfect sang-froid, entirely repudiated the articles of which he had signed himself ("North American Review," November, 1902), under the subterfuge that he signed "in his representative, and not in his individual capacity." It is argued that when a man who had acted as State Secretary of one Republic and President of another could stoop to duplicity of this nature, it can be well understood that men of lower rank, saturated with two centuries' experience of dissimulation and craft, would follow his example, especially as they were told that oaths or promises of such a nature were not binding, and that swearing allegiance to Edward VII. did not commit them to his successor.

As regards the action of the Boer Generals, it is maintained that they were led away at times by the glamour of their reception, but the comparative insignificance of the results of their mission soon brought them to their senses. When confronted by Mr. Chamberlain at their interview in the Colonial Office, the demands inspired by the Hollander clique were promptly and sternly repressed, and they soon had to learn that there were bounds even to the generosity of Great Britain.

- *OPPENHEIM, Captain L. : Clearing Natal. (May and June, 1900 ; a diary of an Irregular Corps.) By Captain L. Oppenheim. Ex. "The Nineteenth Century and After," No. 228, pp. 240-247. Roy. 8vo. February, 1901.

From the quotation from Tacitus at the commencement of this article, it would appear that the writer was of opinion that Sir Redvers Buller, though unassuming and incapable of self-advertisement, was an able and conscientious soldier.

There is an account of the advance of the Natal army from Ladysmith and Elandsplaagte, which appears to have been continued amid constant engagements, until Natal was effectually cleared of the Boers, and "within the shadow of Majuba, the army of Natal at last crossed into the enemy's country, on the 8th of June." It is stated that the General's dispositions deserved not only the success which they achieved, but a greater measure of public commendation than that which befell them. He had turned the impregnable Laing's Nek—"that insurmountable obstacle against which prophets of evil had foretold that he would shatter his men. . . ."

- *OPPENHEIM, Captain L. : The Fight at "Roival (50)." Ex. "The Nineteenth Century and After," No. 304, pp. 908-913. Roy. 8vo. June. 1902.

This engagement was characterised by the fact that it was a fierce attack by the Boers in force. Early on April 11, about 2000 of the enemy advanced on Rawlinson's and Kekewich's columns, then near the Hartz River. The fight which then ensued was described by Lord Kitchener as "very hot while it lasted. Enemy were repulsed by Yeomanry, Scottish Horse, and South African Constabulary, who fought admirably." The remarkable feature of the battle was the desperate courage evinced by the Boers: "the confident onslaught of 2000 men, riding closed-up together from flank to flank, and from front to rear, three and four deep." They "came within ninety yards of the Constabulary. Then the zone of fire in which they found themselves was too furious even for their determination and they broke and galloped away." It is curious to note that the "Peace Conference" was sitting in Pretoria while this encounter was raging, and Kekewich's column was witnessing the marvellous "transmigration of the soul of the Dervish into the heart of the Dutchmen." Some pathetic incidents of the day are related illustrating the courage and resignation of the wounded Boers. The enemy's losses were forty-three killed and forty-five wounded, two fifteen-pounders and one pom-pom captured, besides other casualties occurring in their retreat. The British lost six by death, and fifty men were wounded.

The preliminary meeting was held at the house of Mr. N. Vermaak at Brandfort on September 17, 1904, the chair being taken by Mr. Vlotman, and shortly after, a manifesto was published by those present, detailing their grievances, but asserting that they wished "to stand by the Vereeniging Compact," and desired "a strong and prosperous fatherland under the new flag." A conference at Bloemfontein followed, at which Sir H. Goold-Adams (Lieutenant-Governor of the Colony) was present, who discussed matters with some of the signatories of the manifesto. At the conference at Brandfort, Generals De Wet, Hertzog, and many other prominent men attended, and amongst the resolutions passed was one to the effect that the Congress "declares that it is in favour of the speediest possible introduction of complete self-government, and would arouse the people of the Orange River Colony to co-operate to the end of securing this object."

It is stated that the "Land Board" established in 1901 had, "up to March 1905, placed on the land 691 settlers—heads of families. The total area allotted to settlers amounted to 1,245,332 acres, and the total area purchased for settlement was over 1,025,000 acres, at a cost of £844,379; . . . 501,800 acres also were inherited from the late Orange Free State. The total amount of advances made to settlers was £73,740." It is asserted that "At least £400 capital is necessary to take up an agricultural holding, and more than this amount was required for mixed or stock farming."

The editors state that they "neither take the Boer view nor the missionary view" with regard to Basutoland matters, but they trust "that England will, ere long, return to a true sense of the responsibilities she once undertook, and still owes to the native tribes over the Orange River." The volume gives an historical sketch of the country from the year 1815 up to the date of publication, and Theal remarks ("History of South Africa 1834-54"), "As a guide of Basuto history this work is valuable, but its author had not seen the documents referring to the tribe in the colonial archives, and he was a strong partisan of Moshesh." The writer appeared to have been impressed with the power of the Basuto chief, and it is observed, "Moshesh is alone strong enough to crush the Free State at a blow." The little volume was published anonymously, but it is ascribed in Fairbridge and Noble's Catalogue (1886) to Mr. J. M. Orpen.

Orpen, Member of the Legislative Assembly, Cape Town, 15th July 1879. Cape Town : William Foster and Co., Printers, 55 St. George's Street. 26 pp. 8vo. 1879.

Little is said on the subject of Confederation, the author advocating the representation of the colonies in the Parliament of the United Kingdom. He points out that the French Colonies have representatives in the Parliament of France, and suggests that if considered necessary the colonial members might be restricted to debating, without the power of voting, a system for which there is a precedent in the American Constitution.

The matters submitted by the Basutos for consideration included :—

1. Their legal property in, and tenure of land. Its extent, and the power of Government to alienate or confiscate it, as well as the equities of the subject.
2. Alleged illegal proceedings against Nehemiah Moshesh and others.
3. Representation.
4. Disarmament.

The pamphlet, which is in the form of a blue-book, contains three petitions, all signed by Letsie, Paramount Chief of the Basutos, and dated respectively 1872, 1878, 1880. There is also a letter from Moshesh, dated December 6, 1861, in which he offers to become a subject of Queen Victoria, and among other documents reproduced are the proclamation and Act of Parliament providing for the annexation of Basutoland, 1871. A large broadsheet at the commencement of the work contains eight maps "showing original, or recognised and acquired lands of the Basuto tribe and their absorption under Her Majesty's alliance and sovereignty" from 1833-1880.

*OSBORN, E. B. : South African Federation. Views of Colonial Premiers. In "South Africa and its Future," pp. 16-22. Roy. 8vo. 1903.

It is stated that "Unification has always been an ideal of South African statesmen," and references are made to the attempts made by Sir George Grey, Sir Henry Barkly, and others to bring about the desired result. Sir Wilfred Laurier is quoted as having observed, "Mr. Rhodes made one mistake. . . . Had he allowed time for development, had he allowed the Dutch population to get reconciled to the idea of British citizenship, they would have had much sooner than will be the case the federation of South Africa, which is the only future of that great country."

*OSBORN, P. B. : Survey Practice in the Transvaal. Ex. "Report of the S.A. Association for the Advancement of Science," pp. 387-392. (Johannesburg Meeting.) Roy. 8vo. 1904.

It is stated that "The unit of land measure adopted by the early settlers was 100 paces, and was taken, certainly erroneously, to be equal to 300 Cape feet; this was termed a 'minute,' because it was assumed that the speed of an ordinary horse was about 100 paces per minute. . . . When the early settlers had established themselves in a new tract of country, each man, by mutual agreement, selected and beaconed off a piece of ground 60 minutes square, which, according to the value of the unit of measure, included roughly 3750 morgen." Some particulars are afforded of systems [and methods of surveying introduced at a later period in the Transvaal, together with a table showing the latitude and longitude of points on the borders of the Colony; together with the differences arrived at by alternative systems of surveying.

History of Portugal, containing the enterprises, voyages, and memorable deeds of the Portuguese, the conquest of the East Indies by their discoverers, and the wars in Africa, and other exploits from the year one thousand four hundred and ninety-six to the year one thousand five hundred and seventy-eight, under Emmanuel the first, John the third, and Sebastian the first. Comprised in twenty books, of which the first twelve are translated from the Latin of Jerome Osorio, Bishop of Silves in Algarve, and the following eight taken from the works of Castanheda and other historians. Newly translated into French by S. G. S. (Simon Goulart Senlisien). With an address for the benefit of the readers of this history, and ample indices referring to the principal contents. Printed by Francis Estienne, for Antoine Chuppin.

The title of the first edition reads, "De Rebus | Emmanuel Regis Lusitanie invictissimi virtute | et avspicio gestis libri | dodecim | Auctore Hieronymo Osorio | Episco Sylvensi" |, and was published at Olysippone, at the printing-office of "Antonium Gondisalun," in 1571, and contained 480 pages, in twelve books. A large number of editions and translations have been subsequently issued, amongst which is an English version, translated by James Gibbs, and published in two volumes in 1752. According to Theal ("History of South Africa, 1486-1691"), "this work has always been regarded as one of great authority. Its author, who was Bishop of Silves, was a man of high education, with a fondness for research, and an exceedingly graceful style of writing. He lived from 1506-1580." It is to be observed that in Osorio's account of Vasco Da Gama's discoveries on the S.E. Coast of Africa, it is not mentioned that he called the land by the name "Natal," and this appellation is not made use of throughout the volume.

William Cotton Oswell was born on April 27, 1818, and educated at Rugby and Haileybury. He entered the Indian Civil Service in 1837, and proceeding to Madras, remained in India till the year 1844, when, after suffering from a severe illness, he went for a trip to the Cape. Here he met with Mr. Murray, and arranged to accompany him on a journey to the interior, which was followed by a second expedition with Captain Frank Vardon. In the course of these explorations Oswell met David Livingstone, and a friendship sprang up between the travellers which never "wavered or faltered . . . until the death of the great missionary." Returning to India in 1847, he remained there only a few months, and then revisited England, after which he again proceeded to the Cape, and took part in an expedition with Livingstone, in the course of which Lake N'gami was discovered. He also took part in the explorations which led to the discovery of the River Zambesi in a part of Africa where its existence had previously been unknown, but owing to a variety of circumstances his career as an African explorer ceased shortly after. He returned to England, and in the years 1854 and 1855 went to the Crimea, and was able to render valuable services to the military authorities during the war. In 1860 he married and settled down in England, occupying himself mainly in literary work, in the course of which he revised the MS. and proofs of Livingstone's "Zambesi and its Tributaries," and subsequently contributed an article to the "Badminton" Series on the big game of South Africa. Mr. Oswell died on May 1, 1893, and Sir Samuel

Baker, commenting on his death, observed that he had been "the finest specimen of all that was vigorous and lovable in a man . . . all those who knew him regarded him as without a rival, and certainly without an enemy—the greatest hunter known in modern times, the finest friend, and the most thorough example of an English gentleman."

By Jan Claez, Ten Hoorn, Boekverkooper over t'Oude Heere Logiment. 233 pp. 18mo. 1678. BRITISH MUSEUM LIBRARY.

The humorous works of Aernout van Overbeke . . . consisting of songs and poems. As also his entertaining journey to the East Indies. Collected and brought to light with infinite pains. . . .

Some of these verses are accompanied by music, and they are generally of a witty nature, and include a poem on the return of King Charles II. to England. The description of the voyage to Batavia is characterised by considerable humour, the author making much fun of the Cape wine and tobacco. Overbeke set out on this voyage in 1668, and stayed for some days in Cape Town en route. Ex-Governor Quaelberg being a passenger for Batavia from South Africa, came on board when the vessel sailed from

Table Bay, and he does not seem to have favourably impressed the author, who remarks (see Theal, "History of South Africa, 1486-1691") "that even the Hottentots regarded him with aversion." On Overbeke's return voyage in 1672, he again called at the Cape. He was a Commissioner of the Cape Residency, and in this capacity advised that a tract of country be purchased from the Hottentots to prevent future disputes. In consequence of this suggestion a deal was made with the Hottentot chief, "Prince Schacher," by which he was to receive £800 for his land, but it appears that he only received goods to the value of £2, 16s. 5d. The little volume is one of the most curious of the literary productions connected with South African matters, and during the period 1678-1719 passed through no less than ten editions.

By J. Ovington, M.A., Chaplain to His Majesty. London : Printed for Jacob Tonson at the Judge's Head in Fleet Street, near the Inner Temple Gate. Title ; Dedication, 5 pp. ; Poem and Contents, 6 pp. ; 606 pp. Cr. 8vo. 1696. P

Eighty-six pages are devoted to an account of the African Islands, which contains many interesting details, but the description of the Cape only extends to thirty-two pages. Ovington, who arrived at the Cape on May 16, 1692(3), appears to have been charmed with the appearance of the country, and observes : "Nor did I ever know any that had been in this Paradise of the world who denied it the character of one of the loveliest regions they had ever seen." He remarks on "the indefatigable Diligence and Industry of the Dutch," and states, "they are a People remarkable for Improvements, for their Commendable Pains and Care wherever they Inhabit." He was, however, very much disgusted with the Hottentots, and maintains that "of all People they are the most Bestial and sordid . . . if there's any medium between a Rational Animal and a beast, the Hotontot lays the fairest claim to that species," and he goes into a quaint and curious disquisition regarding the causes of the black skins of the negroes. The writer gives an interesting account of the colonists, and of Governor Simon Van Der Stel, but he soon found out that the "Cape Paradise" had its drawbacks, and he mentions that amongst the hardships of the settlers, "the Sale of their Goods to the Governor, and at his price . . . presses hard upon the Tenants, and keeps them under, by running the chief Profits of what they possess into the Company's hands. . . . Some upon this account quit the place. . . . A tame submission is the only remedy for these Impositions, from which there is no appeal of relief, which is apt to embitter the Lives of the People, nor can any be very happy who are subject to the Tyranny of a Government that is under no restraint."

The entries start with the date November 30, 1837, when Mr. Owen arrived at the American Mission Station on the banks of the Umhlatuzi. Considerable information is afforded respecting Retief, Gardiner, and other pioneers, and there is a full account of the massacre of Retief and his party, which Mr. Owen witnessed from his hut. The missionary remarks, Dingan "sent to me not to be frightened, as he was going to kill the Boers. . . . The messenger was anxious for my answer; but what could I say? I was fearful on the one hand of seeming to justify the treachery: and on the other, of exposing myself and my family to probable danger if I appeared to take their part. Moreover, I could not but feel that it was my duty to apprise the Boers of the intended massacre; while certain death would have ensued, I apprehended, if I had been detected in giving them this information. However, I was released from this dilemma by beholding an awful spectacle." Then follows a very vivid account of the butchery of the Boers and of Mr. Owen's subsequent proceedings, and final departure from Dingan's town, and eventually from Natal. The last entry in the Journal (in Bird's work) is dated May 11, 1838.

There are a number of notes on the Cape, where Captain Owen instructed Lieutenant Vidal to survey the whole of the peninsula and the shores of False, Haut (Hout), and Table Bays. Later on a general survey of the South Coast of Africa was carried out by the expedition, "from Cape Hangclip to the eastward, as far as the Keiskamma River, and from thence northward to Delagoa Bay." Considerable information is afforded regarding the state of the country in the vicinity of the coasts, together with interesting notes on Chaka and the Zulus, and the natives of Delagoa and Kaffraria. There are large charts of Delagoa Bay and the coasts of the Cape, and some illustrations, &c. &c.

One of the most serious attacks on Lord Milner's policy ever published in South Africa. Mr. Pakeman, at the time of his resignation of the editorship of the Transvaal Leader, had been engaged in journalism in South Africa for seventeen years, and his integrity and ability were generally recognised; nevertheless, it is to be noted that he states in the Preface of this pamphlet that he has had to publish his views "in a distant paper" (the Bloemfontein Friend), as "the existing daily press of Johannesburg would not print them." Mr. Pakeman admits that "there is an apparent and rather startling irreconcilability between the position of a writer who endeavoured during twelve years prior to 1899 to add up and push home the indictment against Paul Kruger's Government, and his attitude to-day of equally unwearying hostility to the Government that has succeeded it." Nevertheless, the writer asserts that his attitude is quite consistent and logical, remarking, "My ideal throughout the seventeen years of journalism I have spent in the Transvaal has been that of good Government, waging ceaseless war against Government inept, rotten, or corrupt." It is stated that Lord Milner's Government has, in the minds of many thousands of English and Boers, fallen completely under the sway of a few great organisers of wealth, until it can take no single step without suspicion being at once aroused that the ends of the monopoly are to be further served." With regard to the administration of Imperial funds, it is asserted that "Five millions eight hundred thousand pounds have been spent in repatriation of the Boer . . . but . . . one and three-quarter millions of it went in salaries and expenses in handling the rest"; in the opinion of the writer all this money is irrecoverably lost—"The first attempt to distraint for recovery . . . would set the veld ablaze again, and we are not likely to repeat Sir Owen Lanyon's experiment at Potchefstroom in 1880." The chapter entitled "The Deep Levels—a Case for Enquiry," is a severe attack on the financial methods pursued by the leading gold-mining issuing houses of the Rand; the system followed is drastically criticised, and the writer calls upon the Government to make an inquiry into the matter now brought to public notice.

— : Synopsis of the Edible Fishes at the Cape of Good Hope. By L. Pappe, M.D. Cape Town : Van de Sandt de Villiers and Tier, Castle Street. 34 pp. 8vo. 1853. BRITISH MUSEUM LIBRARY.

It is stated that the Ichthyology of the Cape Colony had hitherto been little studied or cultivated, and that the author had to rely on "personal observation, the account of the fishermen, and above all, nature herself." The account given "merely contains the edible fishes caught in Table Bay and False Bay, as also on the coast of Hottentot Holland." Dr. Pappe remarks that he was "imperfectly acquainted with the fresh-water fishes found in the rivers of the Colony," which are omitted from the list, "though some are said to be excellent." In all, forty-five species are dealt with in this publication.

In addition to the description of the seventy-seven trees and plants included in the compilation, there is an explanation of the botanical terms used, and an account of the "Cape Wax-Berry," with notes on its culture and uses, and directions how to prepare the wax. The author states that the pamphlet "will tend to open the eyes of the incredulous, and show to the Colonists, and to the world, that South Africa is not so destitute of superior woods as most people imagine."

Paravicini di Capelli evidently accompanied Governor Janssens in his visit to the eastern part of the Colony, on which occasion he set out from Cape Town, April 3, 1803. (See Theal, "History of South Africa, 1795-1834.")

*PARK, LESLIE J. : Notes of Travel in South Africa. . . . Melbourne : McCarron, Bird & Co. . . . 24 pp. 12mo. 1898.

An account of a voyage from Australia to South Africa and back, the trip, including the stay in Africa, lasting about three months. The first place touched at was Durban, and the author remarks on the apparent absence of loyalty displayed by the Natalians towards the Governor, and the difference between his reception and that accorded to the Queen's representative in Australia. Among other places, Mr. Park visited Johannesburg, and he states that "the appearance of the city was magnificent"; but, in his opinion, the cost of living was excessive, and he asserted "that a mechanic would be better off in Victoria even at half the wages he would procure in the Transvaal." He was presented to the President, Kruger, whom he describes as "a courteous and diplomatic individual." The writer sums up his views on South Africa as follows: "The more I saw of South Africa, the more highly did I think of the splendid country in which I am fortunate enough to reside. To compare South Africa with Australia is almost on a par with comparing the rays shed by an ordinary sperm candle to those cast from an electric light, and one can be excused for thinking how fortunate the Australians are in having such a grand country to live in."

Mr. Parker practically acted as editor of the pamphlet, to which he contributed part of the contents, being assisted by Messrs. Douglas Story, G. H. Perris, and others. The compilation reviews the points of dispute between the Boers and the British from the pro-Boer standpoint, but contains little on the subject of arbitration, the discussion of which is confined to a few lines at the end of the work, when it is asked, "If we are in the right, why should we fear arbitration?"

Mrs. Parker accompanied her husband in his expedition to New Holland in 1791, the Gorgon sailing for New South Wales via Teneriffe, St. Jago, and the Cape on March 15th. There is an interesting account of the visits paid to Cape Town on the outward and homeward voyages, which is one of the earliest, if not absolutely the first, description of the country by a lady. Soon after their arrival at Simon's Bay the Captain and his party proceeded to Cape Town by land, and were entertained by a Mrs. De Witt, from the windows of whose residence Mrs. Parker could see the wreck of the Guardian, which had been brought into Table Bay by Lieut. Riou. The next day Governor "Van Graaff" called on the visitors, and later on they dined with Colonel Gordon, Commander of the Dutch East India troops. The authoress describes the town as being both clean and pleasant, but observes: "There are no public amusements, nor any particular promenades, excepting the Governor's Garden, at the end of which there is a very large aviary. There are not any public shops, as in other towns; the merchants dispose of their goods both by wholesale and retail . . . the most pleasing sight is the market-place at day-break, when the slaves, mostly two by two, bring their baskets by means of poles on their shoulders. Ostrich feathers are very plentiful. There is also every sort of fruit in great abundance. . . . The women of the Cape are remarkable for their bulk; which I am apt to attribute to their going without stays, and sitting much in the house . . . after marriage they are totally neglectful of their persons." Of Colonel Gordon it is remarked that he "is already well-known for his Museum, and Manuscripts relative to Natural History, and his many enterprising journeys to the inferior parts of that country; for which he was eminently qualified on account of his extensive knowledge of the language, manners, and customs of the Hottentots, by whom he is almost adored." After a stay of over five weeks the Gorgon resumed the voyage. On the return voyage, Captain Parker arrived at Table Bay on March 12, 1792, sailing on April 6th. . . . It is observed that "the slaves were treated at the Cape with the greatest humanity; and only in the name bore the degrading distinction."

Second Part. . . . Published by J. Eedes. . . . 118 pp. 8vo. 1823.

"The writer . . . living in the greatest solitude in South Africa, ventured to act, even under the despotic influence of a Jesuit, as every loyal British subject should, and brought the charges against the Colonial Secretary, Lieut.-Col. Bird, in a tangible shape, before Lord Charles Somerset, on His Excellency's resuming the Government of South Africa."

The first part of the pamphlet contains Parker's Petition to the House of Commons respecting Colonel Bird and the Roman Catholic Church at Cape Town, and the second part consists of copies of letters to prominent personages in England, referring to political matters in the Cape, and in the main, attacking Colonel Bird, who was a Roman Catholic, and as such, in the opinion of some people, not legally entitled to hold an official position under Government at this period. Parker was the head of a considerable party amongst the 1820 settlers who proceeded to South Africa in the East Indian, but it appears (Theal's "History of South Africa, 1795-1834") that "dissension broke out amongst these people while they were on the passage, and some of Mr. Parker's party refused to acknowledge him as their leader any longer."

A series of letters written to Earl Bathurst, Robert Wilmot Horton, and the Earl of Harrowby making certain charges against the political administration of Lieut.-Col. Bird and Sir Rufane Donkin. Parker asserts that under the rule of the latter, the Cape Colonial Office was "the nucleus of fraud, perjury, and murder, every public act being most Jesuitically glosed over." He also states that he was deprived of his rights as a settler under the parliamentary grant, on account of certain letters written by him attacking Colonel Bird.

The author refers to the confusion existing amongst the various forces at the disposal of the authorities during the Kafir War of 1877-8, and remarks, "The Magistrates seemed to have had nothing to do with the police, or the police with the Magistrates, nor had the officer commanding Her Majesty's troops on the frontier, direct communication with any civil authority. No one knew to whom to look for authority, assistance, or information, and matters were going from bad to worse, when luckily Sir Bartle Frere arrived, . . . and . . . began to evolve some sort of order out of chaos." There are accounts of the Guadana, Quintana, and other engagements, together with particulars respecting the formation of a "Burgher Corps," but it is stated that there was much difficulty in getting the Boers to submit to any regulations or drill ; although eventually they came into line. It is asserted that the war spirit gradually gained such irresistible influence over "many civilised Kaffirs . . . who had been Christians since their boyhood," that some of them who held good appointments as clerks or interpreters under Government, left their situations, "exchanged clothes for a blanket," and joined their tribes in the bush. On May 29, 1878, "Sandilli, the great chief of the fighting Gaikas . . . was killed by a stray shot," and a month after an amnesty was published, "and war was virtually at an end." A portion of the volume is devoted to an account of the Zulu War, and in Chapter V. the author examines the causes which led to the hostilities, and gives a sketch of Cetywayo's policy and character, together with some particulars respecting the mobility of the Zulu army, and it is maintained that a Zulu Impi could cover forty or fifty miles a day.

*PARSONS, Lieut. C. S. B.: The Battles of Laing's Nek and Ingogo; with brief notes on the 9-pr. gun of 6 cwt., and general equipment. By Lieut. C. S. B. Parsons, R.H.A. "Proceedings of the Royal Artillery Institution," vol. xi. pp. 677-689. Roy. 8vo. 1881.

The writer relates that the signal for the Boer outbreak in December 1880 was the departure for India of the King's Dragoon Guards and the downward march from the Transvaal of the 58th Regiment, these movements being made under "the popular belief that the Boers were quite satisfied with, and reconciled to British rule," and that two infantry regiments were sufficient to garrison a country larger than France. At the commencement of hostilities, "urgent orders were issued for the immediate despatch of troops to Newcastle, 'an insignificant, dirty town' bordering on the Transvaal." The force concentrated here included about 500 men, consisting of mounted infantry, mounted police, men from the naval brigade, and thirteen companies of rifles, &c., with six guns. There is a detailed account of the engagement of Laing's Nek, which took place on January 28, 1881. It is asserted that the artillery practice was good, a statement borne out by Aylward, the ex-Fenian who had joined the Boers, but the "range-finders" proved incorrect and inefficient, to the great disappointment of Sir G. Colley, who had advocated their adoption. The frontal and enfilade fire of the Boers proved very deadly, and the British forces had to retreat with heavy loss. The battle of Ingogo, February 8, 1881, was the result of an attempt on the part of Sir G. Colley to re-establish his postal communication with Newcastle, which had been interrupted by the Boers. There was at first no expectation of a general engagement, but gradually the Boers gathered around, with the object of forming a cordon round the British. "The enemy's accuracy of fire was something marvellous," and the general (Colley) was signally defeated with a loss of 150 men out of 500. He succeeded in escaping with the remnant of his force and two guns, under cover of darkness. There are notes on the guns, carriages, ammunition, &c., with plans of the battlefields.

Mr. Paterson accompanied Colonel Gordon (Commander of the Troops of the Dutch East India Company in South Africa) and Jacob van Reenen in several trips to the interior. He remarked that he does not give a description of the Cape as he would be only repeating what Sparrman and Mason (Masson) had already communicated in their publications. In the course of his travels the author penetrated as far as Namaqualand on the west, and the Great Fish River on the south-east. Although the principal feature of the work is a description of the botanical specimens collected and noted by Mr. Paterson, there are many interesting notes respecting the natives, with a few remarks on the Dutch Colonists. The coloured plates mainly depict

The writer asserts that "the growth of the Colony was very . . . slow, and . . . even that growth was more largely due, in later years, to the growth of the inward countries, and the development of the Rand mines, than to any real progress in the industry of the Colony itself." It is observed that few productive industries existed, "there was no agriculture worth the name," and "no Government land that would be given for settlement to any large class of settlers. . . ." It is stated that the Government have squandered large sums of money and that the fact of the railways being in their hands "is one of the greatest drawbacks to the prosperity and growth of the Colony." The author deprecates the coolie labour system of Natal, and urges that the Parliamentary representatives should be entirely disinterested.

Perhaps the best account of the early days of the Diamond Fields. The author sailed for South Africa on February 23, 1871, and arrived at Du Toit's Pan on May 30th. He remained on the Fields for about six months, and he gives an interesting description of the mines and the social life of the diggers, together with notes referring to the annexation of the country by the British Government, and the protest of President Brand. It is stated that although the Orange Free State nominally administered the territory, it only provided six policemen to keep order amongst 20,000 diggers. Although many of the miners appear to have been very fortunate, others were equally unsuccessful, and the writer advises no one to try his fortune if he has "a fixed income, however moderate." The diggers do not seem to have had much confidence in the permanence of the mines, and it is recorded that one of them who had found a diamond worth £10,000 in a claim, disposed of the latter for £40. It is stated that "The New Rush" (Kimberley) first came into great prominence about September 1871. The author was not fortunate as a digger, and being prostrated with camp fever, quitted the Fields, arriving in England in January 1872.

*PEARSE, H. H. S.: Four Months Besieged. The story of Ladysmith. Being unpublished letters from H. H. S. Pearse, the "Daily News" Special Correspondent. With maps and illustrations from sketches and photographs made by the author. London: Macmillan & Co., Limited. New York: The Macmillan Company. xiv + 244 pp. Cr. 8vo. 1900.

"The volume consists of the letters and diaries" of the author, who was in Natal "when the war broke out," and remained in Ladysmith throughout the siege. It is stated that Sir George White strongly advocated the abandonment of the northern district of Natal, but "allowed himself to be overborne by the urgent representations of Sir W. F. Hely-Hutchinson, the Governor." It is observed that in the early days of the investment, twenty Boers were allowed to come through the lines into the town to demand an exchange of wounded, and these men, it is believed, gave valuable information to the enemy's gunners on their return, while the persistent firing on the ordnance stores, headquarters, and other military offices, seem to show that the spies in the town systematically located every point of military importance. There is a full account of the sorties resulting in the destruction of the powerful Boer guns at Bulwana (Gun Hill) and Surprise Hill, and the Imperial Light Horse were complimented by Schalk-Burger on their pluck, through Mr. Davis, who, having been taken prisoner by some Boers who paid no heed to the Geneva Cross, was eventually released by that general. There is an interesting description of the great assault by the Burghers on Cæsar's Camp and Waggon Hill, resulting in a brilliant victory for the British, which was celebrated by a "Te Deum" at the English Church. It is remarked that after the relief of the town it was discovered that there were only four days' full rations available, and that there were 800 sick and wounded in hospital. There is a military map of Ladysmith, together with a number of illustrations.

*PEARSE, H. H. S. (Editor): The History of Lumsden's Horse: A complete Record of the Corps from its formation to its disbandment. Edited by Henry H. S. Pearse (War Correspondent). . . . With many portraits and other illustrations and a map. Longmans, Green & Co. . . . London, New York, and Bombay. xii + 506 pp. Roy. 8vo. 1903.

Colonel Lumsden conceived the idea "of forming a corps of Indian volunteers," and, in December 1899, "cabled . . . to his friend Sir Patrick Playfair in Calcutta his proposal to raise a corps of European Mounted Infantry for service in South Africa, and backed it with an offer, not only to take the field himself, but to contribute a princely sum in aid of a fund for equipping any force the Government might sanction." It is stated that the volume "is intended to be no more than a regimental record enlivened by the personal experiences of men . . . at a time when the whole British Empire was moved by one impulse." The corps took part in Lord Roberts' march to Bloemfontein, the occupation of Johannesburg and Pretoria, the pursuit of De Wet, and the campaign in the Barberton and De Kaap districts.

The speaker explained his views with regard to a systematic and uniform method of teaching botany in the Cape Colony; and, in calling for criticism and assistance from "South African Botanists," admitted that his object had been "to sketch out . . . a rational course of instruction in Botany . . . rather than the requirements of an examination."

- *PEEL, Hon. SIDNEY : Trooper 8008 I.Y. By the Hon. Sidney Peel, Barrister-at-Law, late Fellow of Trinity College, Oxford. London : Edward Arnold. . . . vii + 168 pp. 8vo. 1901.

The author joined the Imperial Yeomanry at the time when things looked their blackest for the British army during the South African War. On enlisting in London he found himself a unit in a most miscellaneous multitude of men of every rank, profession, and trade, very few of whom knew the way even to handle a rifle. These raw recruits had to ride with an equipment of about 12 stone, and this with the weight of the rider proved a heavy load for the horses. He took part in the Prieska campaign against the rebels, and afterwards went to Boshof and was present at the encounter which resulted in the defeat and death of Villebois-Mareuil. He alludes to the constant attempts of the Boer authorities to spread the belief that the arrival of the British would be followed by every sort of outrage, and he asserts that many Boer women informed him of these reports. He considers that the veld-bred ponies were quite the best horses for the campaign, and had a great contempt for those imported from Argentina. Some chapters are devoted to engagements around Kroonstad and Lindley, and to the disaster which befell Colonel Spragge, Mr. Peel being evidently of opinion that his own corps could have come to the assistance of the defeated yeomanry battalion in time; and he was certainly not one of those who considered General Colville blameless in the matter. For some time the author's corps was engaged in the task of protecting the lines of communication, and he remarks on the custom of keeping the men in total ignorance of what they had to do, and what was going on, considering it the wrong course to adopt. Mr. Peel fell ill at the front, and after some experiences at the Krugersdorp hospital, was removed to the "Wanderers' Club" Infirmary at Johannesburg, and was finally invalided home.

Opinions and Reminiscences of the English War against the Boer States in the years 1899-1900.

In the first chapter, entitled "Cecil Rhodes and Joseph Chamberlain," it is asserted that soon after the former became Prime Minister of the Cape Colony, he sent an "ultimatum" through the Cape Governor to the Transvaal, demanding that the Republic should observe neutrality regarding Matabeleland, renounce their claims to Swaziland, and join the Customs Union.

The author remarks that he must give President Kruger credit for instantly recognising that this "disgraceful ultimatum, which was like a blow in the face from a fist, did not emanate from the British Government, but solely and absolutely from the intriguer Rhodes. The Transvaal Republic realised from this date that Rhodes was her deadly enemy, and that he would do everything in his power to put an end to her independence."

He asserts that "Cecil Rhodes assisted 'Witboy' (the native chief who revolted against German rule) with arms and ammunition." As a sample of the language used, the headings of two of the chapters indicate the character of the work; No. III. is entitled "English lies, English absurdities"; while No. IV. is headed "Matters respecting English ferocities, infamies, and misdeeds."

The concluding chapter is devoted to what the writer calls "The English Question"; he alludes to "robbing, tyrannical England," and maintains that she "is the disturber of the peace of the world," and that "as long as she is one of the great powers, her policy will ever be to incite other states and peoples against each other."

*PENDER, ROSE: No Telegraph; or, A Trip to our Unconnected Colonies, 1878. By Rose Pender. For private circulation. London: Printed by Gilbert & Rivington. . . . 152 pp. 8vo. 1878.

A narrative of a trip to the seaports of South, South-East, and East Africa in 1878. Mrs. Pender accompanied her husband, who visited Africa to arrange for the laying "of a submarine telegraph cable from Aden to Natal along the East Coast of Africa." The writer does not appear to have been charmed with the country, although a great deal of hospitality seems to have been extended to her. In the course of a sporting trip to Saldanha Bay she remarks, "What pleased me even more than the sport was to get an insight into the home-life of the Farmer-Proprietors—all Dutch, being a kind of patriarchal life, consuming only what they breed and shoot; their wines and spirits also grown and prepared on the property, keeping open house during the shooting season, and giving a kindly welcome to all." She was, however, very shocked at the treatment of animals in the Cape, and was amazed and horrified when Mr. Sprigg, the Prime Minister, assured her that "the farmers often light a fire under an ox up country, when he is down and won't move," and she remarks that this "speaks for the character of the colonists more strongly than anything I can say." She noticed the many carcasses of oxen on the roads in Natal, and observes, "It is quite horrid to think of the inhuman way these poor beasts are treated, driven and goaded on till they drop, no food and water, and left to die." Mrs. Pender was by no means impressed with "the delights of travelling" in South Africa; and she states that she saw too much to offend her "sense of decorum and decency. . . . I was often assured in Natal that did I but stay long enough I should get quite accustomed to the many disgusting sights and customs I witnessed with so much distaste. I can only say I should be sorry to become accustomed, as it would simply mean the loss of all sense of delicacy and refinement."

The writer observes that "the definite prolonged line of the Diamond Fields indicates . . . volcanic origin and hidden continuity ; the absence of alluvial near those mines points, perhaps, to glacial erosion ; the presence of diamond mines near some of the river gravels is confidently inferred." The work contains chapters on the Diamond Fields, the Rand, and the Kalihari, with some remarks on the "stone implements discovered in South Africa." It is stated that the volume is not intended "to be a description of the geology of the Cape," but to "embody some practical deductions from geological evidences obtained by the author, in many widely separated localities, during twenty years' intermittent residence."

Also a sketch of its geography, productions, the manners and customs of the inhabitants, &c. &c. With a view to the political and commercial advantages which might be derived from its possession by Great Britain. By Captain Robert Percival, of His Majesty's Eighteenth or Royal Regiment; and Author of an Account of the Island of Ceylon. London: Printed for C. & R. Baldwin, of New Bridge Street. xii+339 pp. Quarto. 1800.

Although the author only resided in the Cape for two months in 1796, and a similar period in 1801, his work affords considerable information respecting the state of the colony at the close of the eighteenth century, but Theal remarks ("History of South Africa, 1795-1834") that the volume is "one of the most unreliable that has ever been issued, and is of no value whatever for any purpose but waste-paper." Captain Percival represented the Dutch population in a most unfavourable light, and it is stated that Lord Macartney's attempts to promote the benefit of the colonists "were rendered useless by the rooted dislike of the Dutch to any innovation of their customs and habits." There is some account of the capture of the Cape and the Dutch fleet in 1795, and a description of the country within a radius of fifty miles from Cape Town. Attention is drawn to the value of the Cape as a British possession, and to the weakness of the Dutch Government which took over the colony from the British in 1803. It is maintained that the former were unable to keep the up country Boers in order, that they were in constant rebellion, and if a British force were sent to retake possession of the country, a great proportion of the inhabitants "would hail the arrival of their conquerors as their deliverance from the brink of destruction."

- PERESTRELLO, MANUEL DE MESQUITA : Description of the Coast of South Africa. MS. (1576)?

A most important manuscript, preserved in the British Museum, which is believed to be the original report presented to King Sebastien by Perestrelo. The whole pamphlet, with a translation, is reproduced in Theal's "Record of South-Eastern Africa," vol. i. pp. 286-329, together with a photograph of the chart. Mr. Theal observes that the document has "never been previously printed in full, though in a condensed form it appeared in the 'Arte de Navegar,' by . . . Manoel Pimentel (Lisbon), . . . 1762." According to Saxe Bannister ("Humane Policy"), the account was published in a work entitled "Oriental Navigation," issued in Paris, 1775, in which it was inserted by M. D'Apres de Manneville. The narrative contains accounts of the Cape of Good Hope, Capes Agulhas, Sebastien, Vacas, St. Bras, Talhado, Baxas, Serras, and Recife; Points Delgada, Pescaria, Saint Lucia, Land of Fumos; the bays of St. Sebastien, Cape Vacas, St. Bras, St. Catherine, Ferosa, St. Francis, Lagoa, and Espirito Santo; the rivers Infante, do Ouro, and Espirito Santo, together with the first detailed description of the "Land of Natal." The original manuscript is illustrated with several coloured drawings, and is "in perfect preservation."

*PERESTRELLO, MANUEL DE MESQUITA: Narrative of the Wreck of the Ship St. Benedict. In Theal's "Records of South-Eastern Africa," vol. i. pp. 150-285. 8vo. 1898.

"The St. Benedict was one of a fleet of five ships sent by King John the Third from Portugal to India, March 1553. She was . . . commanded by Fernão d'Alvares Cabral." On the return voyage in 1554, the ship encountered heavy weather, and was finally wrecked on the African Coast, and forty-four Portuguese and one hundred slaves were drowned. The survivors decided to attempt to reach Sofala, but on the way Cabral was drowned in the St. Lucia River. Eventually, after terrible suffering, twenty Portuguese and three slaves (the survivors of the 322 souls who started on the journey) arrived at Mozambique. The narrative affords considerable information respecting the interior of a portion of Portuguese South-East Africa at this period.

The speaker remarked that the South African War did not come as a surprise to him, and that during several years' residence in London (1886-1894) he saw "unmistakable signs of approaching trouble . . . it was plainly evident that unless the grievances of which foreigners in the Transvaal complained were redressed, an armed conflict was inevitable, sooner or later." While admitting that "sympathy is due to the Boers in their struggle," he contends that "to say that Great Britain should yield to injustice because she is stronger is a strange paradox," and he observes, "The English have a better right to interfere in the Transvaal than the United States had in Cuba. . . . The Boers are not oppressed; they are the oppressors."

The headings of the chapters fairly indicate the trend of the author's ideas, and he commences his criticism of Dr. Conan Doyle's work with an account of how "The Boer Hunt begins," while the second and third chapters give details respecting "The British Conspiracy," the first phase relating to "The Plot and the Raid," and the second to "The Campaign of Threats." Mr. Perris indites a scathing condemnation of "the Fictionist as Historian," and avers that "Dr. Conan Doyle has never, any more than Mr. Kipling, given us any ground to expect that he could or would write serious history." He goes through the "Cause and Conduct of the South African War" point by point, traversing every argument in favour of the British point of view, and condoning every shortcoming attributed to the Boers. At the close of the brochure Mr. Perris remarks that he leaves "Dr. Conan Doyle to his conscience, and Mr. Chamberlain to the destiny that awaits Imperial adventurers."

In discussing the theories of Jean de Bloch upon the "Impossibility of War," the author states that "it has been shown in the Transvaal that a military force, unsupported by artillery, cannot be driven from its positions even by a numerically very superior enemy, and that sheltered defenders suffer only insignificant losses if they disperse and cover themselves, only concentrating when fire has been suspended for the purpose of assault . . . it has even been estimated that the losses of an assailant to-day, in spite of all the improvements in tactics, must be six or eight times those of a sheltered defender. The Transvaal War proves this to the full, and it proves also that with modern arms every tactical error becomes fatal and regiments may be almost entirely destroyed in a few minutes unless they surrender."

The pamphlet discusses some contributions to the subject of the Anglo-Boer Question from the pens of M. The writer considered that it would not be wise to give the Boers complete independence, in view of the existence of the sentiment, “that from Zambesia to Simon’s Bay, South Africa should belong to the Afrikanders,” so openly maintained in Mr. Reitz’s manifesto.

Dr. Peters, who had been employed in German Colonial enterprise in Central Africa from 1884 to 1896, and who had been appointed Imperial High Commissioner for the Kilimanjaro District, was attacked in the German Parliament by the Radicals and Social Democrats, and losing his commission, decided to turn his attention to Zambesia. In this volume the author presents the narrative of his explorations from 1896 to 1902, seeks to prove that the Ophir of the time of King Solomon was the country between the Lower Zambesi and the Limpopo Rivers, and endeavours to show that the Egyptian "Punt" expeditions were taken to this part of the continent. The work is an important contribution to the investigations regarding the early history of Rhodesia, and the efforts to identify the kingdom of Macombe with that of Monomotapa.

A curious side light on one of the contributory Dutch sources of the population of the Cape is afforded by the author's description of a party of "children" who travelled on the ship which conveyed her to Cape Town, en route for Madagascar, in 1857. Nearly one hundred of these so-called "children" had been selected by emigration committees in Dutch towns, but it is asserted they "were not children at all; almost without exception they numbered from sixteen to twenty years, instead of from ten to fourteen; and they must certainly have been picked up out of the streets, for in all my life I never saw such an amount of riff-raff collected together. The grown up girls must have been lounging about for years in the sailors' taverns; the younger ones followed the example of the elder, and the whole community swore like the sailors themselves, sang the most uproarious songs, and stole from one another. Their want of cleanliness was awful." These "children," it is stated, were brought from Holland for "the Dutch settlers . . . with the object of training them up as servants and artisans." They were to receive "board, lodging, and clothing from the day of embarkation. On reaching their destination they serve without wages for the first two years and a half . . . every following year they receive, besides board and clothing, sixty Dutch guilders . . . on completing their twenty-first year . . . they have then the right of leaving their masters."

*PHILIP, Rev. JOHN: Researches in South Africa; illustrating the civil, moral, and religious condition of the native tribes; including journals of the author's travels in the interior; together with detailed accounts of the progress of the Christian Missions, exhibiting the influence of Christianity in promoting civilisation. By the Rev. John Philip, D.D., Superintendent of the Missions of the London Missionary Society at the Cape of Good Hope, &c. &c. Vol. I., xxxv + 403 pp.; Vol. II., viii + 450 pp. London: James Duncan. . . . 8vo. 1828.

Few books on South African matters have been the subject of such fierce denunciation and bitter criticisms as these volumes. The author proceeded to South Africa in the service of the London Missionary Society in 1819, and soon became a most drastic censor of the methods pursued towards the natives by the colonists, and the policy of the colonial Government with regard to native affairs. His strictures were so severe that the attention of the British Government was directed to the matter, and when, in 1826, Dr. Philip visited England, his views received the careful attention of Lord Bathurst. When the "Researches in South Africa" were published a large amount of public indignation was aroused, and the subject was brought before the Houses of Parliament, considerable changes in the administration of native affairs in South Africa being eventually brought about. Generally speaking, the work was condemned in the Cape Colony as a biased and partial production, and "highly overdrawn statement, from which many explanatory particulars known to the author were omitted." The reflections on the officials of the Cape Colony were bitterly resented, and one of the accused—Mr. Mackay, Landrost of Somerset—brought an action against Dr. Philip for libel. Judgment was given against the author, who had to pay £200 in damages, together with costs amounting to about £900, the Chief Justice, Sir John Wylde, "characterising the statement concerning Mr. Mackay as a 'false and malicious libel,' the two other judges concurring in his condemnation" (Theal, "History of South Africa, 1795-1834"). The missionary party in London, however, and a considerable section of the public, regarded Dr. Philip as a martyr to colonial prejudice, and public meetings were held to defray the cost of the case. Despite the extreme views held by Dr. Philip, his charges against the Dutch colonists were upheld by a whole phalanx of writers, from the times of Percival and Barrow to those of Livingstone and even later authors; the instances of exaggeration and inaccuracy quoted against him do not in any very material degree affect the accusations as a whole, although possibly matters may have been omitted which might, to a certain extent, have condoned the brutalities which were stated to have taken place. The volumes afford considerable information respecting the natives and colonists in the first quarter of the nineteenth century, together with details respecting missionary work in South Africa at this period.

*PHILIP, Rev. JOHN: The Importance of Early Instruction. A Sermon, preached for the benefit of the South African Infant School Society, by John Philip, D.D. Published at the request of the Committee. Cape Town: Printed at "De Zuid Afrikaan" Office, by P. A. Brand, No. 3 Market Square. 48 pp. 8vo. 1831.

With inscription: "Rev. S. (?) Guffin (? Griffin), with best respects from the author."

In the appendix there is a brief account of the formation and progress of infant schools in South Africa. These were started by Dr. Philip in 1829, and placed under the superintendence of Miss E. Lyndall in Cape Town. Up to the date of publication, schools had been opened in Cape Town, Graham's Town, the Kat River Settlement, Lattakoo, and Genadendal, all under the auspices of the Society formed by the Rev. Dr. Philip called the "South African Infant Schools Committee."

*(PHILIP, Rev. JOHN): (Criticism of the Rev. John Philip, taken from the "Zuid Afrikaan" of Sept. 18th, 1835). MS. 8vo. 1835.

Dr. Philip is charged with inventing "the most gratuitously false statements with reference to the origin of the Bushmen Tribes," connected with "a tale of murderous propensity, tyranny, and oppression against the Border colonists, with regard to their treatment of the natives." It is stated that Dr. Philip "has alleged, contrary to all true testimony, that Bushmen were originally Hottentots, but driven to a predatory course by the colonists." The evidence of a number of writers on South Africa is brought forward with the object of proving the falsity of these allegations.

This "tribute to the hallowed memory" of Dr. Philip is from the pen of a gentleman who states that he was no relation of his, but who remarks "he was a father to me for nearly half a century," and it is suggested that it "might create a public call for his Life from his son, or his son-in-law," and thus prevent compilers from palming off any unwarranted memoir. It is asserted that "Dr. Philip's sway" in political matters "saved the missions which Van der Kemp and Campbell planted, and that policy annihilated slavery in the colony." A letter is quoted in which the missionary maintains that (contrary to Barrow's statements) the condition of the Hottentots had not been improved by the possession of the Cape by the British, and that at the time of writing (1822) they were still "in the hands of the Boers, a condition—but for the missionaries—worse than common slavery." The writer dilates on "the wrongs that have exasperated two millions of Kaffirs, and alienated even the Hottentots from their wonted allegiance." He denies that Dr. Philip would have pleaded "for disloyal Hottentots" had he been alive, but admits that "he might have indeed accounted for" their disloyalty, "while condemning it, and even proved that there are more ways of being disloyal to the Crown than just rebelling against its authority at a moment of panic and provocation." It is argued that "Justice was the only thing Dr. Philip ever claimed for either the Hottentots or the Kaffirs, and that conciliation was the only policy he advocated or pursued," and it is urged that if the Government had not had some regard for the rights of the natives, "their old oppressors would have both clutched and crushed them again and again; yes, and would do so yet, did not British law keep Boer cupidity and violence in check."

*PHILLIPS, LIONEL : The Outlook in South Africa. In vol. xxxi. "Proceedings Royal Colonial Institute," pp. 305-336. 8vo. 1900.

The speaker asserted that "A feeble, vacillating policy in the past, framed with the object of conciliating Dutch feeling, gave birth to those aspirations which culminated in the terrible war now drawing to a close . . . any measure obviously designed to propitiate the Dutch will be interpreted as a sign of weakness, and will produce an entirely contrary effect to that intended. . . . A confederated South Africa is the ideal which all lovers of the country will hold in view, but no consummation of it can be hoped for until the white population has buried the fiercest of its animosities, and until peace and security is well established in the land."

*PHILLIPS, LIONEL : The Transvaal. Speech delivered by Mr. Lionel Phillips (Ex-President of the Witwatersrand Chamber of Mines) at the first banquet of the Annual South African Dinner Committee at the Whitehall Rooms, Hotel Metropole, July 7th, 1904. The Duke of Marlborough (Under-Secretary of State for the Colonies) in the Chair. Reprinted by permission from "South Africa" of July 9th. Published by the Imperial South African Association. . . . Westminster (London). 11 pp. Small Quarto. (1904.)

The speaker gave particulars of the working of a gold-mine in the Transvaal, together with some figures and statistics indicating the importance of the gold-mining industry. He referred to the use of the Chinese as labourers, which he characterised "as an expedient of a more or less temporary nature" resorted to until the supply of native labour was adequate. Mr. Phillips concluded his speech on the Transvaal by remarking, "Let all of us who are interested in its welfare do our best for the unity of the races, the development of its resources, and the establishment of a large white population. . . ."

*PHILLIPS, LIONEL : Transvaal Problems ; some notes on current politics ; by Lionel Phillips. London : John Murray. x + 370 pp. 8vo. 1905.

The writer, a Reform leader in the Transvaal under the Kruger régime, gives his views respecting the mining industry, the Labour Problem, the political situation, and the relations between the Boers and British population in the Transvaal at this period. Few writers could have had more opportunities for the study of those problems than the author, and the volume is a practical exposition of the social and political condition of the Colony when just recovering from the last stages of the war.

*PHILLIPS, Mrs. LIONEL : Some South African Recollections. By Mrs. Lionel Phillips. With 36 illustrations. Longmans, Green and Co. . . . London, New York, and Bombay. x + 183 pp. 8vo. 1899.

Mrs. Phillips, a colonial by birth, became the wife of a Johannesburg millionaire, who gradually, in spite of himself, apparently, was involved in the complex web of Transvaal politics. There is a good description of the early days of the Rand, where the author arrived in 1889, but she evidently did not admire the Boers, and describes President Kruger as having "manners none and customs beastly." It is stated that the writer was in London when the news came that Jameson had crossed the Border, and she wrote a letter to the Times in which she discussed the invitation sent to Jameson by the Reformers, and their failure to come to his assistance. She appears to have been severely taken to task by her husband's partners (Wernher, Beit & Co.) for publishing this letter, and later on she interviewed Mr. Chamberlain, who told her that her husband's life was safe, which did not seem so certain a few months later on. Soon after Mrs. Phillips left for South Africa, where her husband had been imprisoned in Pretoria, and she describes in a graphic manner the many cruelties and indignities perpetrated on the Reform prisoners, the exciting events before the trial, and the scene when sentence of death was passed. She describes the head gaoler, Du Plessis, as a "coarse brute, filthy in mind and body," although he is represented as having been a personal friend of President Kruger. After the four leaders were sentenced to death the author appears to have lived in a great state of nervous excitement and apprehension until the sentence was finally reduced to a fine of £25,000 each. In conclusion, the position of Dr. Jameson with regard to the Reformers is again alluded to, and it is asserted that the latter vainly relied on Jameson's sense of honour to explain the damaging statements with reference to their not coming to his aid at Krugersdorp, which resulted in so fierce an attack on the leaders of the Reform Movement in England and South Africa, and gained for the time the nickname of Judasberg for the town of Johannesburg.

*PHILLIPS, Captain L. MARCH : With Rimington. By L. March Phillips, late Captain in Rimington's Guides. London : Edward Arnold. Pp. 10, 219. 8vo. 1901.

An account of the South African War in the form of a series of letters, dating from November 1899 to December 1900, and giving details respecting the battles of Belmont, Graspan, Modder River, and Paardeberg, the relief of Kimberley, the surrenders of Cronje and Prinsloo, and various other incidents. The author entertained very decided views about "the justification of the war," asserting that his "own reason for fighting" was to further a united South Africa, whilst he laughed at taking part in the struggle on account of "the Uitlanders and their grievances," and scoffed at the notion of a "Dutch conspiracy." Captain Phillips appears to have had a sincere liking for the Burghers, and observes, "Never tell me the Boers aren't brave. . . . People who think the war can be ended by farm-burning, &c., mistake the Boer temper. I scarcely know how to convey to you any idea of the spirit of determination that exists among them all, women and even children as well as men."

In the "Catalogue of Books relating to South Africa," by Fairbridge and Noble (Cape Town, 1866), T. Phillips is stated to be the author of this work, which was published anonymously.

An account of the British settlements at Albany, founded by the 1820 settlers, and including a description of Kaffraria and its inhabitants. The author spent about three months in South Africa, in the year 1825, and greatly admired the scenery and prospects of the country. He visited several Boers, whom he describes as being very hospitable, good colonists, and hunters. The Kaffirs are carefully and minutely delineated, the writer having collected many particulars respecting their habits, and there is an account of Graham's Town, and a pretty folding coloured plate depicting the entrance to the Kowie River.

PIENAAR, PHILIP: With Steyn and De Wet. By Philip Pienaar, of the Transvaal Telegraph Service. Methuen & Co. . . . London. 173 pp. Cr. 8vo. 1900.

The author asserts that the war will never be over in the hearts of the Boers, who, he maintains, have been embittered by the farm-burnings, and by the way the system of the concentration camps has been carried out. He affords information respecting many smart telegraphic tricks by means of which the British plans became known to the enemy, resulting, in many cases, in grave disasters to their troops, and he states that at the time of Colonel Spragg's misfortune at Lindley "most of the British telegrams passed through our hands before reaching their destination." Pienaar fled to Delagoa Bay after the battle of Machadorp, but he was not allowed to recross the frontier, and was finally deported with other Boer refugees to the convent of Thomar in Portugal.

The author asserts that "the whole system on which the Mounted Infantry is organised appears to be a wrong one," and he maintains that the excellent results attained were owing to the superior character of the men and officers supplied by the battalions from which these companies were drafted. Colonel Pilcher was not of opinion that the irregular troops were on the whole superior to the soldiers trained in the army, and he observes, "Our experience of the latter draft of Yeomanry should be sufficient to prevent us from ever again attempting to raise more than a very limited number of mounted irregulars, in any country where their civil pursuits have not already rendered the majority of the inhabitants good horsemen."

Vol. II. The Coillard Family. vii + 388 pp.

London : Sampson Low, Marston, Searle & Rivington. . . . 8vo. 1881.

¶The author was chosen by the Portuguese Government to take a leading position in the expedition sent by them to explore South Central Africa. Messrs. Capello and Ivens were also associated with the expedition, but the travellers parted company in 1878, and Serpa Pinto went his own way. He arrived at Loando on August 6, 1877, and his long journey to the Indian Ocean was made in intervals between attacks of fever which often threatened his life. He was careful, however, to keep accurate observations throughout, and nothing in the way of illness seems to have interfered with these valuable records. He travelled from Benguella to the Upper Zambesi, and thence through the Kalahari to Khama's Country and the Transvaal. The narrative includes detailed accounts of the native chiefs and their subjects along the route, and is full of all kinds of adventures, the journey having been carried out in the face of exceptional difficulties and privations. The author's experiences with "the King of the Ambuellas' daughters" appear to have been somewhat embarrassing to the explorer, the customs of the country diverging from the austere life on which he had determined, as far as Africa was concerned, and no little tact was required to soothe the wounded feelings of the high-spirited royal ladies. When the kingdom of the Barotse was reached, Serpa Pinto's affairs eventually came to a desperate pitch, owing to the treachery of King Lobossi and some of his counsellors, and his camp was attacked by the natives, who, however, were beaten off by his faithful followers. Later on the King provided him with boats and he escaped from the country, and soon after was informed of the whereabouts of the well-known missionary, Coillard, to whom he resolved to go for assistance. After many more troubles he succeeded in reaching "Luchuma," the camp of Mr. Coillard, in an almost exhausted condition, but he soon recovered under the kind treatment of the ladies of the missionary's family. He subsequently visited the Victoria Falls, and eventually joined his hosts in a journey to Khama's Country, where the explorer met with friends, who provided him with funds enabling him to make his way to Pretoria, where he resumed communications with the Portuguese Government, and was warmly received by both Dutch and English.

London: Hamilton, Adams & Co.; Whittaker & Co.; Simpkin & Co.: Benson, Weymouth. xiv + 375 pp. 12mo. 1840.

In Chapter XIV. will be found an interesting description of Cape Town, in which it is remarked that "extensive estates, elegant houses, beautiful gardens, spacious vineyards, refreshing fountains, and shady groves are scattered in every direction close to the foot of the mountain, in such a variety of taste and fancy that the worn-out sailor is delighted beyond measure. . . ." It is stated that the Governor, Lord Caledon, was endeared to every one "for his mildness, his cordiality, and ease of access, as well as his hospitality," with the sole exception of "the garrison chaplain—that turbulent, restless, insatiable, irascible, extraordinary, and unfortunate creature, Doctor Halloran (as he was called there)." A dispute arising between the Governor and the chaplain relative to the Chaplainship of Simon's Bay, Halloran took umbrage, and "determined to have a hit at the Governor from the pulpit. It is to be recollected Lord Caledon's family name was Alexander, and his property lay among copper mines," and the chaplain, "looking directly at the Governor's pew," gave out the text (Paul's 2nd epistle to Timothy, ch. iv. ver. 14), "Alexander the coppersmith did me much evil: the Lord reward him according to his works."

With a Map by Mr. Plaisted; and A Journal of the Proceedings of the Doddington, East-Indiaman, Till she was unfortunately wrecked on the East Coast of Africa. With a Daily Account of the Transactions of twenty-three of the People, who were miraculously saved on an uninhabited and barren Island ; A Draught of which is prefixed, by Mr. Webb, One of the Mates belonging to the said Ship. The Second Edition. London : Printed for T. Kinnersly, in St. Paul's Church Yard. 289 pp. 16mo. 1758.

A full description of the shipwreck of the Doddington, giving details not met with in any other account. A regular and almost daily journal was kept, probably by Mr. William Webb, the third mate, whose sketch of the coast, showing Bird Island, is prefixed to the volume. The shipwrecked crew remained on the Island, then uninhabited, from July 17, 1755, till February 17, 1756, when they sailed for St. Lucia in the sloop they had constructed, touching on the mainland from time to time to obtain supplies from the natives. They reached Delagoa Bay on April 20, and were taken to Madagascar by Captain Chandler. Two days later, the Carnarvon, Captain Norton Hutchinson, arrived at the Island, and arrangements having been made for their passages, they left Morondava on July 1 for Madras, arriving on August 1. Here they delivered up "the packets, treasure, and private effects," which after some trouble had been recovered from the crew who had taken them from the wreck. The narrative contains some interesting information respecting the Hottentots and Kaffirs met with on the coast, and the account of the wreck published in 1826 appears to have been mainly compiled from these pages.

*PLANT, ROBERT: The Zulu in Three Tenses. Being the forecast of the Zulu's future in the light of his past and present, by Robert Plant, Senior Inspector of Native Schools, Natal. Pietermaritzburg : P. Davis & Sons. . . . 168 pp. 8vo. 1905.

It is maintained that "The Zulu man has a distinct objection to systematic and continuous labour, that he is in fact "a stupid, lazy fellow," and endeavours are made to ascertain the causes which have brought about his inactive and unprogressive status. Amongst the reasons given are the climatic conditions of the country, the system of relegating most of the manual work to women, the former insecurity of personal possessions, and the universal custom of polygamy. Chapters entitled "Customs," "War," "Wedlock," "Family Life," and "Folk Lore," fully illustrate the present life and habits of the Zulu, whose national existence, it is asserted, became practically extinct after the close of the war in 1879. "The more potent formative influences" which have been, and are still being brought to bear on the natives, are civilised law, missionary work, education, and bad example, and these four factors are carefully discussed in all their bearings. While it is admitted that education and missionary work have materially improved the condition of a certain proportion of the population, it is stated that "The heathen Zulu of to-day is a man very much lower in the scale of life than the Zulu of the past." Special reference is made to the bad example shown to the natives by the colonists with regard to their custom of making their servants do the most trifling services for them. It is stated that "many a vehement preacher of the dignity of labour" would shrink from allowing his wife or daughter to fetch a pail of water across the yard, however physically strong they might be, and thus "the native learns . . . that for even children work is degrading." It is remarked that a native can hardly be taught good behaviour, "when little urchins of ten or twelve are allowed to call him all sorts of coarse names; to throw stones at, or kick full-grown men, without the slightest provocation." Discussing the future, the writer recommends the prohibition of polygamy and the custom of paying for wives (Ukulobola), due notice being given to the natives that at a certain date these practices would be a breach of law, the establishment of courts of equity, together with practical education in industrial work.

A number of cartoons, mostly extracted from the pages of Le Figaro, being black and white sketches on the South African War. One of the most offensive represents Mr. Chamberlain viewing the thousands of victims of the war holding a watch in his hand, exclaiming :—

Many of the drawings show considerable humour, more particularly the frontispiece, which represents Paul Kruger with his back to John Bull, who, with his leg manacled to a heavy weight, is endeavouring to catch De Wet with a butterfly net. There is a rather vulgar cartoon representing Mr. Rhodes with somewhat prominent Semitic features standing with his hands in his pockets and exclaiming, "L'argent c'est le sang des autres."

With an appendix of original papers, &c. London: Printed by W. Savage, Bedford Bury; for T. Cadell and W. Davis, Strand. 129 pp. 8vo. 1807.

This collection of pamphlets gives some details of the career of Sir Home Popham between the years 1801 and 1807. The Commodore took charge of an expedition to Calcutta in 1801 and to the Red Sea in 1803, and was afterwards subjected to much criticism owing to the heavy expenses incurred by the squadrons for repairs and supplies. In July 1805 he was placed in the naval command of the expedition sent to capture the Cape, the troops of which were commanded by General Baird. Popham's instructions were to co-operate with the General, and after the surrender of the Cape to re-embark the troops and recruits destined for India, and to return to St. Helena with the remainder of the force and transports, and, in a subsequent communication, he was instructed "to send a Frigate to cruise on the East Coast of South America." The naval Commander, however, considerably exceeded these instructions, and after the surrender of the Cape, he engaged in an expedition against Buenos Ayres. In the course of his trial he justified his action by alleging that he left the Cape well protected, while he contended that there were many precedents for the course he adopted without having received definite instructions on the subject. The result of the court-martial was that Sir Home Popham was "severely reprimanded." He was, however, soon after appointed Commander-in-Chief on the Jamaica Station. He died in 1820 at the age of fifty-eight. The pamphlets afford considerable information respecting the expedition to the Cape, and throw some light on the management of naval matters at the commencement of the nineteenth century.

*POWELL, Rev. F. H. : Soldier and Padre. The experiences of a Chaplain at the Front. By Rev. F. H. Powell, A.K.C., Dist. Org. ; Sec. A. C. S., sometime Chaplain with the South African Field Force. With a Preface by the Lord Bishop of St. Asaph. Published by H. H. Ashworth & Co. . . . Manchester. 152 pp. 12mo. 1902.

The writer remarks that "with criticism gone mad it was not to be expected that the chaplains in South Africa would escape," and he protests against the remarks of Mr. Mortimer Menpes in his work entitled "War Impressions," who, he says, "writes with but superficial knowledge of the subject." Referring to the latter's statement re the Boers, that "Religion is to them a habit of life, a daily influence," and to the assertion that he "never heard an English Tommy singing a hymn, either by himself or in the company of others," Mr. Powell maintains that his own "experience was very different," and says, "I frequently heard English Tommies singing hymns and whistling hymn tunes. . . . If I were asked to compare Boer and Britain (? Briton) in this respect, I should be inclined to say the Boer's religion is outward, Tommy's inward." Mr. Powell was arrested by some Boers near Ventersburg, and was taken to Commandant Haasbroek's laager. His captors came back after an interview with the Boer General and informed their prisoner that Haasbroek told them he did not want any more prisoners and they were to shoot him, but as they were not under his command they intended to take him to General Fourie. On arriving at this General's laager he met with Judge Hertzog, from whom he "received such kindness and consideration as were possible under the conditions in which the Boers were." After some detention Mr. Powell and his servant escaped, but were followed by the Boers (who were not, however, successful in recapturing the fugitives), and they fell in with a party of British troops under Lt.-Col. White at Ventersburg. Mr. Powell had many opportunities of conversing with the Boer prisoners, and came to the conclusion "that the Pro-Boers at home" were "responsible for the continuance of the war and for much of the blood that has been shed on the South African Veld."

There is a brief history of the campaign, culled from military and civil sources, in the introductory portion, but the scope of the volume is mainly limited to a "description of events in which the Transvaal Rifles participated." The work possesses a large number of illustrations, and a "Muster Roll" of the 1st Transvaal Mounted Rifles.

A useful work of reference which brings together in a short compass "the leading facts connected with the growth of our Empire in South Africa, the doings of the Boer communities there, and the causes and chief events of the . . . war" up to the end of March 1900. There are references to many celebrated speeches, and a good index.

(Title, 172 unnumbered pages, Colophon.) Black Letter, 5¼" × 3¼". 1554.

A quaint and curious little work, probably the first English book dealing with the continent of Africa, as a whole. "The Prologue to the Reader" states that Pratt, having read ancient and modern authorities, "made a lyttle abridgement or abstract not in hope of any lucour or particuler profite, but prouoked to do this, only to require fauour of the people." In "The discription of the Countreye of Ethiope, and the aunciente manners of the Ethiopiens," Pratt observes that "Ethiope is a region deuyded into two partes. The first number was issued as No. 1027, Vol. IV., probably following the numeration of the former publication entitled the "Friend of the Free State." It was first published in Quarto and afterwards in Folio, and it existed for fifteen days, the last number published being No. 12. A full account of this journalistic curiosity will be found in "War's Brighter Side" by Julian Ralph, one of the editors.

- *(PRETORIA): The City of Pretoria. Illustrated. An historical, commercial, and general review, compiled and published by A. Macmillan. Johannesburg: R. G. McKowen & Co. . . . 167 pp. Roy. 8vo. 1903.

"The object of this production is to serve as a vade-mecum to every one interested in the Transvaal Capital," which is described as "a little city, verdant and picturesque, nestling tranquilly in the lap of magnificent hills, a little city that has been a centre of intense interest, and played an important part in history during the recent years." The "historical and political résumé" gives some particulars of the history of the Transvaal during the last quarter of the nineteenth century, and the "general review" gives a picture of the position of the town and its inhabitants after the termination of the war.

The preliminary announcement states that the Pretoria Friend would be published daily by a committee, and that any profit would be handed to the Military Governor for Charitable Purposes. Communications were to be addressed to Lord Stanley or Lieut. Hon. J. Ward. The paper contained proclamations, official notices, cables, and a leading article.

A reproduction of the two numbers and a supplement of a paper published in the prisoners' camp at Waterfall, Transvaal, during the South African War. According to the "Press notice" written by The Times the original production was "written, and illustrated too, with one solitary pen, in a penny exercise book," and the reviewer observes, "Though the literary matter is very good . . . we must give the palm to the illustrations, which are almost all admirable . . . a decorative border of thumb-nail—or rather, little finger-nail—sketches of various military types—British, Colonial, and Boer—shows in high degree the gift of seizing a man's character and portraying it with a few scratches of the pen." Amongst these, Mr. Kruger's portrait is particularly good. The reprint forms one of the most curious specimens of journalism connected with the war, and is a most humorous and interesting souvenir of the campaign.

Journal of an Expedition under Commandant Pretorius against Dingan.

A full translation of this pamphlet will be found in J. Bird's "Annals of Natal," vol. i., pp. 576-599, and an abstract of the Contents is preserved in Chase's "Natal, A Reprint of the Authentic Notices" (The Natal Papers), Part II., pp. 120-129. The Journal was kept by Mr. P. K. Zietsman, and Pretorius and his chief officers appended a signed declaration stating that every word therein mentioned was correct. The expedition was carried out in consequence of the non-fulfilment of Dingan's promises for the restitution of the property of the emigrant Boers who were massacred by the Zulu king on February 10, 1838. The force under Pretorius consisted of nearly 500 men, and Dingan was defeated in two engagements, the latter of which resulted in his complete overthrow. The pamphlet contains an account of the execution of Dingan's envoys, Tambusa and Umthlela, who, "contrary to all law and justice, were brought to trial before a court-martial. . . . They were both condemned to be executed . . . a few hours later on the same day, 21st of January 1840, the condemned men were led to execution. . . . This act of Mr. Pretorius—for the chief blame must rest on him—was a great mistake as well as a great crime. . . ." (Theal, "History of South Africa, 1834-1854.")

According to J. Bird's "Annals of Natal," this Journal was first published in the Zuid-Afrikaan, Cape newspaper, February 10, 1846.

Smith, Neethling, Maasdrorp, and Colonel Bayley. The witnesses examined were Messrs. Pretorius, De Waal, Mulder, Olivier, Stapleton, Meiring, Lessing, and Colonel Maurice. The Committee reported that they had not received the slightest assistance from the military authorities or the Martial Law Board, but the inquiry "has not on that account been less thorough or impartial." They expressed their firm conviction "that neither Mr. Pretorius nor Mr. Mulder has ever been guilty of conduct which would in the remotest degree justify the treatment to which they are proved to have been subjected." With regard to the former, they remarked that the only utterances made by him "with which fault can be found are contained in a speech made by him at Cradock . . . (see Appendix D.D.) . . . but nothing in that speech was of a seditious or disloyal nature." In this speech Mr. Pretorius stated that he was "convinced that the war was nothing but a continuation of the Jameson Raid," and while professing his loyalty declared that "the position could be made untenable, unbearable for flesh and blood."

- *PRETORIUS, WILLEM JURGEN: Narrative of Willem Jurgen Pretorius; in Bird's "Annals of Natal," vol. i. pp. 230-237. Roy. 8vo. 1888.

This narrative deals with the years 1834-1839, and gives some details respecting the adventures of the parties of trek-Boers who went to Natal. There is an account of the massacre of the Boers by Dingan, and of the expedition against the Zulu king in December 1838, as also of the proceedings of the Volksraad at Pietermaritzburg, and the subsequent campaign against Dingan when his kingdom was overthrown. Pretorius observes, "There were about twenty or twenty-five Englishmen at D'Urban, with some of whom I had an acquaintance—Cato, Dick King, Ogle, and others whose names I scarcely remember. I never noticed nor heard that they had any unfriendly disposition towards the Boers or their Government. They seemed to be content to conform to our regulations."

A narrative of two years' residence in South Africa, 1876-8, the latter part of which was spent in Kaffraria, where the husband of the author had a Government appointment. There is a description of the ox-waggon journey up country, the beautiful scenery of the banks of the Buffalo River, and the difficulties and inconveniences connected with South African travel at this period. In July 1877 Mr. and Mrs. Prichard started from King William's Town for their destination in the Transkei, i.e. the Idutywa Reserve, which they reached safely after somewhat rough travelling. They were, however, not destined to settle down to a quiet life in this peaceful spot as, soon after their arrival, the Kaffir War broke out, and the little settlement became alive with military and civil visitors. Mr. Prichard had to go on duty to Umtata, and it is stated that shortly after the house was rushed by a body of refugees and fugitives who made themselves perfectly at home, helping themselves to everything in the place without any reference to the mistress of the establishment. Later on Mrs. Prichard packed up some of her goods, and retreated to the mission station at Blythwood, where she experienced much privation and discomfort owing to insufficient supplies.

The War in South Africa, prepared from official telegrams and private letters. Illustrated.

Rather an interesting narrative, part of which has been contributed by other writers. There are several songs (with musical score), poems, and many illustrations which are not to be met with in other works. Amongst the latter is a portrait of Joubert in his tent, with Botha sitting beside him, probably the last photograph of the elder Boer Commander-in-Chief ever executed, as it is observed that it was taken shortly before his death. Another interesting portrait is that of "Hans Cordua," who—according to the inscription—was murdered by the British on a charge of forming a plot against Lord Roberts' life in Pretoria.

With inscription on flyleaf, "Rev. Robert Morehead, Edinburgh, from the author."

The first published account of the early experiences of the 1820 settlers. The letter from the author to the publisher, dated from the South African Library, Cape Town, January 25, 1824, refers to the deplorable condition of the British settlers brought about by the failure of three successive crops, followed by a disastrous flood. The pamphlet was published with the object of drawing the attention of the British public to the sufferings of their countrymen in South Africa, and the writer expressed the hope that the aid afforded might be of great and permanent benefit. Some particulars are given of the position of the new settlements at this period, together with suggestions for the defence of the colonists, and some remarks on the natives and the Dutch farmers. With regard to the latter, Pringle remarks, "The African Boers I know well; and with all their faults, I do not hesitate to characterise them as a highly important and respectable class of men." He evidently considered that only time and experience, coupled with a certain amount of assistance, were necessary to overcome the difficulties of the 1820 settlers, and to render them a successful, independent, and prosperous body of colonists. It is stated that the 200 Scotch mechanics brought out by Mr. Moodie were now nearly all doing well. At the end of the little volume will be found the prospectus of the South African Journal, afterwards proscribed by Lord Charles Somerset.

*PRINGLE, THOMAS: Ephemerides; or, Occasional Poems, written in Scotland and South Africa. By Thomas Pringle. . . . London: Smith, Elder & Co. . . . viii + 220 pp. Cr. 8vo. 1828.

The first published collection of Pringle's poetical works. The Scottish poems were written before the poet's departure for Africa, and copious notes, especially on the South African subjects, are annexed. Many contemporary authors, Coleridge among the number, greatly commended the little volume, which is unique in its poetical description of scenes in South Africa, about which little was known up to the time of the publication of the volume.

The letter is only dated "Saturday Evening," and is addressed to a Mr. Redding, and refers to a contribution sent by the latter (probably for insertion in "Friendship's Offering"), Pringle remarking, "I have just recd. and read your 'Hyperion'—it is so clear and trenchant that had I not been completely printed up, I should gladly have inserted it."

The sonnet, "Poets are Nature's Priests," was published in "Ephemerides" under the title "Wordsworth," but in Leitch Ritchie's edition the poem has the same title as in the MS.

James Montgomery, with a notice stating that "these lines were written for the Rev. Barnabas Shaw, of Cape Town, in aid of his appeal to British benevolence to enable him to build a place of worship there for the slaves, of whom there are about forty thousand in the Colony." Sheffield, Nov. 28th, 1828. J. M." Pringle also contributed to this volume "Spoleto," and "Lines written in an Album."

This volume reproduces the South African poems published in "Ephemeres," and others which appeared in various periodicals to which the author was an occasional contributor. The "Narrative of a Residence in Africa" is published for the first time, having been delayed owing to Mr. Pringle's duties as "Secretary to the Society for the Abolition of Slavery throughout the British Dominions." There is an engraving, an engraved title-page with vignette, and a map of the ceded territory on the Kaffrarian frontier.

- *PRINGLE, THOMAS: Narrative of a Residence in South Africa. By Thomas Pringle, late Secretary to the Anti-Slavery Society. A new edition. To which is prefixed a biographical sketch of the author, by Josiah Conder. London: Edward Moxon. . . . xxiv + 356 pp. 8vo. 1835.

In an advertisement at the end of the pamphlet entitled, "The Present State of the English Settlers in Albany" (1824), it was stated that Pringle was preparing for publication a volume which was to be entitled "A Residence of Four Years in South Africa." The work, however, was not issued till 1834, and in this, the second edition, "a few passages and notes, exclusively of colonial and temporary interest," have been omitted from the narrative. Thomas Pringle was born at Blaiklaw, Scotland, on January 5, 1789, and owing to an accident in childhood became permanently lame. He was educated in Kelso and Edinburgh, and in 1808 was appointed to a clerkship in the Scottish Public Records Office. In 1817 he became connected with the publication of Blackwood's Magazine, and two years later published his first work, entitled "The Autumnal Excursion, and Other Poems." Later on in the year the Pringle family decided to emigrate to South Africa, and they proceeded to the Cape in 1820, Thomas Pringle taking charge of the party as pro tempore leader. Their destination was a valley near "Baviaan's River," and their settlement was afterwards known as "Glen Lynden." There is an interesting account of the early experiences of the Albany settlers, with much information respecting the natives and Boer farmers. In the main, Pringle speaks well of the Dutch colonists, though he refers to the cruelty shown to the natives by the early pioneers in South Africa, which, however, he asserts was by no means confined to the Boer section of the population. He considered that "these men have been trained from their childhood to regard Bushmen with nearly the same feelings as they regard beasts of prey. . . ." In the face of the evidence collected by Pringle from the Boers themselves, it is difficult to understand why Mr. Theal observes that in this respect the author "was apt to let his fancy run wild." Pringle remained at Glen Lynden for two years and then removed to Cape Town, where he was appointed Librarian of the South African Library, and he also opened an academy, and started The South African Journal in conjunction with Mr. John Fairbairn. Owing, however, to the bitter opposition of Lord Charles Somerset, his prospects in South Africa were ruined, and he returned to England. Here, after an unsuccessful effort to secure compensation for his losses from the Government, he was appointed to the post of Secretary of the "Anti-Slavery Society," a position which he retained until the objects of the Society were attained, seven years later. It was Pringle's intention to return to South Africa, but his health failed, and he died on December 5, 1834. "Few men were richer in friends than Mr. Pringle. . . Among them might be enumerated most of the literary men of the day," and the "eminent philanthropists with whom his official engagement brought him . . . into immediate connection and intercourse . . . no man, perhaps, ever had fewer enemies, or descended to the grave with fewer animosities."

It is remarked that "one excellent writer at least had an eye for" the picturesqueness of South Africa "three-quarters of a century ago. The poet of South Africa is Thomas Pringle. His opportunities were few compared with those which have been open to later settlers, and he knew only a small tract of the Cape Colony. . . . But what he did see Pringle put into verse, which, though not exactly immortal, has found its modest place in English literature." Mr. Low does not profess the same enthusiasm for Pringle as Coleridge and others, and he remarks on the latter's "exaggerated encomium" on the poem entitled "Afar in the Desert"; he admits, however, that if the verses "have no great poetic merit, they have at least plenty of local colour. The poem, as a whole, puts into literary English the South African impression, and this is a feat so rarely performed that it is worth noticing. For my own part I never repeat the lines . . . without a kind of emotion." There are quotations from several other poems, as also from Leitch Ritchie's memoir of Pringle in Moxon's edition (1858), which is critically examined and discussed, and some details are afforded respecting the life, character, and ability of the poet. The writer concludes by observing that although "there are not many readers for minor poetry eighty years old . . . no one who reads Pringle's narrative will be wasting his time. It is an excellent piece of writing. . . . Some of its vivid touches and picturesque incidents are not easily forgotten; and the whole . . . is full of instruction and admonition for a generation which has to take up a task that would be less tremendous, but for the mistakes and the neglect of Pringle's contemporaries in South Africa and at home."

A letter signed by Messrs. Prinslo and Burger, as President and Secretary of the Volksraad, "on behalf of all the members of the Council," referring to the Governor's proclamation of December 2, 1841, resuming the occupation of Natal, and intimating that its inhabitants would be considered British subjects. The document asserts that the proclamation is unjust to the emigrants and is calculated to bring about "war and bloodshed." A long list of grievances is set forth, and the letter ends with a "protest

Mr. Pritchard was invited by the Cape Town municipality to make a personal inspection of the town with a view to reporting on the best means of dealing with the sewage. During his stay in South Africa he visited Kimberley and the Transvaal, and the result of his investigations is condensed in the two articles which appeared in the column of the Birmingham Post. He gives an account of the working of the diamond mines and of the town of Kimberley, which he asserted could be "sewered by gravitation, and the sewage disposed of at a cost of little over £100,000." There is also a description of Johannesburg, Pretoria, and Cape Town, with remarks on the sewage system advocated, together with notes upon the drainage and the waterworks supply for these towns.

- *(PRO-BOER): How to become a Pro-Boer. A vade-mecum for Little-Englanders. By one of them. With Introduction by Sir A. D. Windbag Bunkum. London: Simpkin, Marshall, Hamilton, Kent & Co., Ltd. 23 pp. Sm. Quarto. 1902.

The Introduction states that the work "appears to scintillate with the true spirit of Boerism, and, so far as it is calculated to act as an antidote to the detestable, and alas, too prevalent vice of patriotism, the book may be heartily recommended to all sincere haters of their country. . . . The work appears to be distinguished . . . by a commendable anxiety to see the British nation humiliated, stamped upon, spat upon, and cordially loathed by the enlightened, truth-loving, Christian peoples of the Continent." The creed of "pro-Boerism" is inculcated in ten precepts, of which the first reads: "Patriotism is a mischievous, narrow-minded prejudice which encourages people to think their own country superior to other countries."

- *(PRO-BOER DELEGATES): The New Pro-Boer Delegates. Who are they? Why are they here? (Published by the Imperial South African Association.) Printed by Vacher & Sons. . . . (London.) 8 pp. Cr. 8vo. N.D. (1902).

It is stated that Messrs. Sauer, Merriman, and Hofmeyr were about to take the place of the five delegates of the so-called People's Congress at Graaff-Reinet, and to carry on their intrigues in England for the restoration of the independence of the two late Dutch Republics. It is asserted that Messrs. Sauer and Merriman were members of the late Cape Ministry, who left Kimberley and Mafeking defenceless, and threw every obstacle in the way of the Cape Volunteers. They had permitted the Boers to import guns and ammunition via Cape ports, and had declared that the duty of the Cape Colony, in case of war, was to remain neutral. The British public are warned against these delegates of the Bond who are working for "confederation on an Afrikaner basis."

*PROCTER, JOHN: Boers and Little Englanders. The Story of the Conventions. By John Procter, Barrister-at-law. London: George Allen. . . . vii+241 pp. 12mo. 1897.

It is stated that "the chief object of this book is to render the position of Her Majesty as Suzerain over the South African Republic intelligible to all." After briefly touching on the early history of the republic, the author details the circumstances under which the first annexation of the Transvaal took place. It is pointed out that Mr. Kruger, though opposed to the annexation, continued to draw his salary as a member of the Executive Council for  $8\frac{1}{2}$  months after that event took place. In the account of the peace negotiations between Sir Evelyn Wood and Kruger, Pretorius, and Joubert, there is a definition of the word suzerainty, which was asked for and accepted by Kruger. General Sir Evelyn Wood said, "Suzerainty means: That the country has entire self-government as regards its interior affairs, but that it cannot take action against, or with, any outside power without the permission of the suzerain." The volume contains a strong indictment of the Transvaal with respect to its constant infractions of the Convention, and particular stress is laid on the perpetual cruelties perpetrated on the Kaffirs, and the frequent enactments passed against them, expressly violating article 3 of the Convention. The author asserts that "the articles of the Conventions have been openly defied," and he considered that there should be no further delay in forcing the Transvaal to respect her engagements. In the appendix are several letters, telegrams, and instructions to Governors, &c., all having reference to the affairs of the Transvaal.

This work gives an account of the proceedings of Van Bengel in search of certain treasure lost in the Doddington, particulars of which had been afforded him by a sailor who escaped from the wreck. Van Bengel, it is stated, was unsuccessful in his attempts to secure the treasure, and Governor

Van Tulbagh ordered his immediate deportation to Holland, where he became insane.

Samuel Purchas was born in the year 1577, at Thaxted, in Essex, and died in London in the year 1628. Purchas' work is considered to be one of the most important Collections of Voyages and Travels ever published, and complete sets of the work in good condition are very rare and costly. A reprint of the work was undertaken by James Maclehose & Sons of Glasgow, in twenty volumes, with an index (277 pages) prepared by Madame Marie Michon; it was published 1905-7. The principal voyages of South African interest will be found in the first volume, but the second volume contains John Leo's "Observations of Africa," and Vol. V. contains Pigafetta's "Report of the Kingdom of Congo," &c. &c. &c. The Voyages are set out in length in Petherick's "Catalogue of the York Gate Library," and in the "Catalogue of the Library of the Royal Colonial Institute."

It is asserted that "most of the books about South Africa . . . are either too historically detailed or too critically abstruse," and that many of them are too high-priced for the ordinary reader. "The natural consequence is that popular ignorance on South African men and matters is colossal." The volume aims at supplying the necessity for an up-to-date compilation dealing with the leading questions and problems, and discussing the points from various attitudes adopted by those interested in the affairs of the sub-continent.

- *(RADZIWILL, Princess CATHERINE MARIA): The Trial of Princess Radziwill. As reprinted from "Cape Times." Evidence in full, and judgment. Cape Town: "Cape Times" Limited. 56 pp. Cr. 8vo. 1902.
The high rank of the prisoner, the seriousness of the charges against her, and the dramatic incidents of the case, caused some excitement in Cape Town during the hearing of the trial. From the evidence given in court, and the sworn statements of Messrs. Rhodes and Scholtz (who both died before the trial), it does not appear that there would have been any other result had the two witnesses lived and given their evidence in person, but the real relations between the Princess and the dead statesman (if any existed outside the help of a generous man to a woman in trouble) will probably never be revealed. The evidence brought forward disclosed forgeries of letters, bills, and cables from London, the prisoner asserting that the money thus acquired was used for the purpose of supporting a newspaper, published in Cape Town, of which she was the editor. The Princess endeavoured to prove that she received the forged bills from Mrs. Scholtz, and the Chief Justice, in passing sentence, animadverted severely on the cruelty of the prisoner in trying to throw guilt on an innocent woman, and for bribing a boy in the telegraph office to be her accomplice in forging a cable from London.

The last chapter of the volume is devoted to "An Appreciation" of Cecil Rhodes, with the views and reminiscences of the writer on his character, "his colossal ambitions, his satellites, personal relations, his last hours, his inner thoughts, his conduct during the war," &c. &c. The Princess remarks, "For a long time" Mr. Rhodes "resisted all those who had tried to bring about a rupture between us, but circumstances proved too strong for him. . . . At last he was goaded to the last pitch of exasperation, and did what he threatened he would do—that is ruin me. . . . I never saw him again, except from a distance, sitting up in the window of the cottage in which he died, panting for breath, struggling with approaching death, and all my heart went out to him in his misery and loneliness. . . . Had Mr. Rhodes possessed faith, he would have conquered the world. As it was he only terrified it. . . . In spite of all . . . defects, faults, and errors, he was a man one could not help loving when one knew him well. . . . Indifference was impossible towards this strange being who, with all his vices, the arrogance, the overbearing insolence of the race to which he belonged, possessed also an uncommon attractiveness which drew towards him even his most passionate detractors."

London : Sampson Low, Marston & Company, Limited. . . . South Africa : J. C. Juta & Co. . . . xix + 248 pp. 8vo. 1898.

It is stated that, "after the Transvaal was given back to the Boers by the British in 1881, Malaboch refused to pay taxes to the new government, and since then has never paid." The natives becoming insolent, the Transvaal government despatched a force against them in May 1894, the author accompanying the commando by request of the Bishop of Pretoria. There are some details respecting the refusal of certain commandeered Uitlanders and others to join the force, and amongst these was a Boer named Van de Westhuizen, who committed suicide in preference to proceeding to the front. The expedition arrived at the base of operations on June 12th, and was under the superintendence of General Joubert, who had with him Commandant Erasmus and Colonel Ferreira. After several engagements and a blockade of Malaboch's mountain, the Kaffir chief surrendered on July 31st, having with him 1000 natives who kept 2000 white men at bay for a considerable period. Mr. Rae observes that "through the campaign the poor Malabochians were seldom aggressors, their attitude being nothing more or less than a gentle protest against what they considered an unjust encroachment on their ancestral rights." The volume contains a large number of interesting illustrations, a map of the scene of war in Zoutpansberg, and a graphic account of the Jameson Raid.

The author, who went through part of the South African War with Colonel Rimington's Guides, was evidently a great admirer of his leader. He describes the battles of Paardeberg and many other engagements, and much stress is laid on the intense sufferings of the horses, which, it is maintained, was mainly occasioned by the red tape prevalent at home and on the field. The officers are severely criticised, but the fighting of the irregular forces is warmly commended. The work advocates a kind of qualified conscription for the protection of the Empire, and considers that, "given a rigorous treason law," the Boers will be loyal to the crown.

*RATHBONE, WILLIAM: Speech on the Retrocession of the Transvaal in 1881, and on the causes of the present difficulties in South Africa, by William Rathbone, LL.D., on the occasion of unveiling a bust of the Rt. Hon. William Ewart Gladstone, at the Liverpool Reform Club, on Dec. 4th, 1899. Printed by request of the Chairman and Committee of the Liverpool Reform Club. Together with a memorandum of a suggestion made in a conversation, in 1869, by the Rt. Hon. Sir Mountstuart Grant-Duff, as to the best means of improving official sources of information as to the political conditions and military resources of foreign nations. 17 pp. Sm. Quarto. (1899.)

In disclaiming any wish to make a party speech on the subject of the South African War, or "to attempt to apportion blame or responsibility for its commencement," the speaker said that he had entered on the subject "to defend from unfair criticism an act of Mr. Gladstone's which, I believe, to have been wise and righteous." The act of retrocession had been described by Lord Rosebery as a "sublime experiment," and an "attempt to carry into the principles of international policy the principles of the Gospel itself." Mr. Rathbone alluded to the immense responsibilities Great Britain had already taken on herself in governing the Zulus, Basutos, Bechuanas, and Matabele, and asked whether it was desirable to over-burden the Government with the responsibility of ruling the Republics. He agreed, however, that "it must not be left a second time in the power of the Boers to apply the wealth of the gold-fields to raising up such a military power as will be a standing menace to the peace of South Africa and to the equality of the white races there," but considered that a settlement could be arrived at which "shall satisfy the just love of independence felt by the Dutch." Referring to a conversation with Sir M. Grant-Duff in 1869, he remarked on the British policy "of interfering in the affairs of a country first, and of getting to understand it afterwards. . . ."

This monograph discusses the question as to what rights the British Government can claim to have acquired by right of conquest over the Netherlands South African Railway, and the Chief Justice of the United States is quoted as having asserted "that war gives to the Sovereign full right to take the persons and confiscate the property of the enemy wherever found. . . ."

In Part II. of the work the author proceeds to investigate the question as to whether the Netherlands Railway acted as a non-combatant in the war, and he brings ample and conclusive evidence that it did not. The behaviour of the Directors of the Company, in Amsterdam, is commented on, and it is maintained that as soon as the chance of war turned against the Boers—but not before—they instructed the Managing Director in South Africa regarding the strict neutrality of the railway, long after (with their full knowledge, and without protest on their part) they had—according to the letter of the Managing Director—“made cannons and ammunition, sold material to the Republics, blown up bridges on British territory,” &c., &c. It is maintained that the shareholders do not appear to have been alarmed at the assistance rendered to the Republics by the Company, of which they were duly informed, and they certainly raised no remonstrance or objection to the use of the railway as an “instrument of attack and defence”: their fears and protestations of strict neutrality seem to have suddenly sprung into life as soon as events showed that the Republics were hopelessly beaten. The author considers that we ought to be just before we are generous to such people, who would combine against the British Empire again to-morrow if they had the chance, and it is urged that we should give them strict justice according to the recognised principles of international law—nothing more and nothing less.

A "Memorandum on the Kat River Settlement," written by J. Rose Innes, Esq., and a letter traversing the subject, which was sent by the author to the agent of the London Missionary Society, sum up the position of the settlement, relate its early history, and throw some light on the causes of the rebellion and the war, whilst the rest of the volume consists of 21 letters which discuss the matter at further length. The Hottentot Rebellion is described as "an event as unlooked for as it is foolish, wicked, and treacherous," but the writer's own evidence goes far to prove that the appointment of injudicious and even unjust magistrates was responsible for much of the discontent among the natives, who were, up to this time, known for their loyalty to the Crown. According to Mr. Read, one of their leaders, "Hermanus," who was afterwards killed in an engagement, had most serious grounds for discontent. He had been awarded a tract of land by Sir B. D'Urban for his people's services in two preceding wars. This grant was to be a free and unencumbered gift, but in 1848 the Government of the Cape placed the property under the regulations for locations, which made the rent of it (and it was no larger than an average Boer farm) about £100 a year, and distraint was threatened in case the tax was not paid. In the last letter the whole situation is recapitulated, and the conclusions arrived at were to the effect that the Kat River people had certain grievances against their local functionaries, but that nothing had occurred to justify the rebellion. The volume closes with a letter upon the war written by the Rev. William Thompson of Cape Town.

The South African Question from the English Standpoint. Translated from the English by Dr. Emil Reich.

The writer points out that the Dutch Republics obtained their independence as a gift from Great Britain and not by force of arms, and that this independence was granted under certain conditions which have not been fulfilled. It is stated that never in history has so mighty a power as Great Britain shown herself so indulgent and liberal to a small state; while, on the other hand, the history of the Transvaal has been one succession of attacks on the rights of her neighbours. It is asserted that peace in South Africa is desired by the whole of the civilised world; but the Republic across the Vaal has proved itself incapable of maintaining peace, whilst it is fully recognised on the Continent that British South Africa is a South Africa which is thrown open to the whole world.

The Governor appears to have treated the officers of the convict ship with some discourtesy and abruptly referred them to Colonel Bird, who informed them that his Lordship had decided to send on board the Neptune sixteen convicts who had escaped from New South Wales in the Harriet. In spite of their remonstrances (on account of the overcrowded state of the vessel) the convicts were eventually sent on board, Lord Charles Somerset asserting his full authority and taking full responsibility, and stating that "were all the prisoners to die, he would be answerable for the consequences."

Mr. Reitz observed that in the January number of the South African Magazine, the Rev. A. T. Wirgman, in a paper entitled "The Rise and Development of the Native Question," remarked, "The feeble remnant of the Hottentot nation, losing their language with their nationality, substituted for it the barbarous patois called Cape Dutch, which still, after eighty years of English rule, forms (to the great injury of civilised speech) the chief medium of communication in our country districts."

Mr. Reitz asserts that—(1) "Cape Dutch is not a barbarous patois," and (2) "its use as a chief medium of communication in our country districts is not imperious (?) to civilised speech."

Fifty selected Afrikander Poems (with prints) collected by F. W. Reitz, formerly Chief Justice, and subsequently President of the Orange Free State.

A perusal of some of these poems, especially those relating to the Boer War of 1880-1, and to the Taal question, throws considerable light on Mr. Reitz's attitude towards the British at—and probably long before—the time of the publication of the first edition in 1888. The translations from the English, which include "Tam o' Shanter," "John Gilpin," "Auld Lang Syne," and many others, show considerable ingenuity, though some of the familiar lines appear grotesque in the extreme, dressed up in incongruous expressions of the Taal.

The case for the Boers could hardly have been placed in more zealous hands than those of the past President of the Orange Free State and Mr. W. T. Stead. The latter avers that for nearly a quarter of a century he had been on the other side, and would "in the last resort" have supported "legitimate insurrection" to bring about "a progressive Liberal administration in Pretoria." His conversion appears to have been caused by the conviction that a plot had been made to add the territory of the Transvaal to the Empire. Nevertheless, Mr. Stead is careful to disavow any responsibility for all or any of the statements in "A Century of Wrong," but he maintains that the volume is an authentic exposition "of what . . . the Boers think of the way we have dealt with them for the last hundred years." Mr. Reitz reviews the "oppression and persecution endured by the Boers for the past century, and by the collection of everything detrimental to the character of the British policy in South Africa, and the careful elimination of anything that could be advanced in its favour he makes out a case which would strongly appeal to the uninitiated. It was evidently with little fear of the ultimate result of the struggle, to the consummation of which he had so greatly contributed, that he prophesied that eventually "from the Zambesi to Simon's Bay it will be 'Africa for the Afrikander.'"

Mr. Reitz asserts that he intimated to Lord Kitchener that he signed the peace conditions in his official and not in his personal capacity. He maintains that a peace signed, so to speak, by men "with the knives at their throats . . . may be a 'peace that passeth all understanding,' but it is not a peace that should be regarded as a lasting one, or as one binding upon the consciences" of those that signed it.

*REUNERT, THEODORE : Diamond Mining at the Cape. In "Official Handbook . . . of the Cape of Good Hope," edited by John Noble. Pp. 177-219. 8vo. 1886.

One of the first of the more important articles on diamond mines and mining. There is a folding illustration of the Kimberley Diamond Mine, from a sketch by Mr. Dennis Edwards, and sections of the De Beers and Kimberley Mines.

See NOBLE, JOHN (Editor) : "Official Handbook . . . of the Cape of Good Hope."

REUNERT, THEODORE : Reunert's Diamond Mines of South Africa. By T. Reunert, M.I.M.E., A.M.I.C.E. London : Sampson Low, Marston & Company, Ltd. Cape Town and Johannesburg : J. C. Juta & Co. Kimberley South African and International Exhibition. 64 pp. 8vo. 1892.

Practically the first work of importance dealing solely with the subject of diamond-mining in South Africa. The book was originally compiled by Mr. Reunert for a new edition of the Cape of Good Hope Official Handbook, and was republished in its present form in order to afford information respecting the diamond industry to visitors to the Kimberley International Exhibition of 1892. The author observed that during the four centuries that have elapsed since the Portuguese first sighted the Cape, no more important event has happened in South Africa than the discovery of the first diamond by Mr. John O'Reilly in March 1867, an occurrence which spread new life and energy throughout all the States and Colonies of the country. It is asserted that the diamondiferous area is defined on the north, west, and south by the wide fork formed by the Vaal and Orange Rivers. It is remarked that reports of diamonds being discovered as far up the river as Christiana were prevalent, but that "no one seriously believes that they come out of the soil." With reference to this statement it must be observed that Colonel Newnham-Davis in his work, "The Transvaal under the Queen," speaks of "his men amusing themselves by digging for diamonds in Christiana." The village had acquired an unenviable notoriety as the head-quarters of a gang of illicit diamond dealers, but there can be no question that alluvial diamonds are and have been constantly discovered in this place. It is stated that the country around Kimberley was denuded of timber to a radius of a hundred miles, and that this had had a most injurious effect on the climate of the town, but with the advent of the railway communication to the Diamond Fields this denudation has, to a great extent, ceased. There is a full description of the Kimberley, De Beers, Dutoitspan, and Bulfontein mines up to the consolidation of the industry, the author estimating that between sixty and seventy million pounds' worth of diamonds were produced from these mines within the twenty years preceding the publication of the work. Some particulars are given respecting the purchase of the Wesselton mine by the De Beers Company, together with details of properties outside the amalgamation, Jagersfontein, and other Free State mines, and some of the more unimportant and at present unpayable propositions surrounding Kimberley. Many statistics are given, together with a description of the geological formation of the country. There is a general plan of the Kimberley diamond fields, a bird's-eye view of the Kimberley Exhibition, and many illustrations of the various phases of the diamond industry.

An account of the Diamond Fields, &c., brought up to date, and including a number of statistics, &c. There is also an account of the Witwatersrand and the De Kaap gold fields, the latter having been compiled by Mr. P. A. Ogilvie. Several articles on the gold fields were contributed by other writers.

An important monograph, in which the information afforded is brought up to date. The writer remarks that "for the last five years (1887-1892), the value of diamonds exported has remained at between four and four and a quarter millions per annum, and this appears to be the maximum value the market can take without unduly affecting the price."

It is stated that "President Kruger is astonished and pained at the attitude of Mr. Chamberlain and Her Majesty's Government towards Mr. Cecil Rhodes and the Chartered Company," and some details are given of episodes in the long struggle between the President and the South African statesman for the mastery of South Africa. The writer shows a certain amount of appreciation for the Boer leader, "the resolute old Dutchman whose pluck and persistency no one can help admiring, even if one dislikes his 'Chadband' diplomacy and his despotic government." It is pointed out that, "In the United British South Africa of Mr. Rhodes, there was to be room and representation under equal institutions for Dutchmen; in the United Dutch South Africa of President Kruger, there was to be no representation, and no equality of justice of any kind, for the Englishman." Allusion is made to attacks on Mr. Rhodes and the capitalists, in papers like Truth, the Saturday Review, the Daily Chronicle, and other English and Transvaal periodicals, and it is remarked that the low estimate formed by these papers of the statesman's character hardly tallies with the high opinion formed of him by General Gordon. The author asserts that "The truth, which England must carefully keep before her, is the exact opposite of President Kruger's monstrous perversion of it. The Transvaal, as at present misgoverned, is proved by recent events to be a menace to the peace of our dominions in South Africa. It is a centre of conflagration from which civil war may at any time break out."

Amidst the chorus of attacks upon the Jameson Raid and all concerned with it, the writer had the courage to point out that such methods are by no means unprecedented, and in some cases have been held to be justifiable. A comparison is drawn between the Jameson Raid and the Dutch Raid carried out by William of Orange (afterwards King William III.) upon England, to relieve that country from the despotic government of James II.; and another example mentioned is the raid of Garibaldi, which started with hardly twice the number of men commanded by Jameson, and eventually succeeded in overthrowing the government of the Bourbons in the Two Sicilies. It is stated that the latter raid caused a great outcry on the part of all the powers of Europe, but the verdict of time would appear to have justified a movement, the irregularity of which is now absolutely condoned by universal consent, and in remarking on this event Lord John Russell said, "When a people from good reasons take up arms against any oppressor, it is but an act of justice and generosity to assist brave men in defence of their liberties." This, it is contended, was done in the case of Mr. Rhodes, although the final act of Dr. Jameson was done without his sanction and with his disapproval. Once the false step was taken, Rhodes, with a chivalry perfectly incomprehensible to some of his opponents, refused to desert his old friend Jameson, and "did not emphasise his condemnation of his lieutenant." It is argued that on the score of even partial justification everything depends on the question whether the grievances in Johannesburg were of such a nature that "there was adequate cause for the revolutionary movement," and a strong point of evidence with regard to the state of affairs in the Transvaal was that, according to the writer, "Lord Loch, in 1894, expecting a revolution at Johannesburg, assembled the Bechuanaland police on the frontier for the purpose of moving them to Johannesburg, in order to provide the necessary protection for the lives and property of British subjects." The author predicts that eventually Mr. Rhodes will be forgiven, not only in England, but in South Africa, by the majority of the nation, who will recognise the "lofty patriotism which was the motive of his somewhat irregular action."

It is asserted that "Cecil Rhodes, who began by popularising Britain amongst the Boers, has ended by bringing her under suspicion among every Dutch stoep." It is remarked that both Kruger and Rhodes are great men, but the one "aims at South Africa for the stranger, and the other at a South Africa for the South African," and that although "Rhodes loves reform not a little, he loves gold reefs still more."

an appreciation, by Imperialist. With personal reminiscences by Dr. Jameson. Two portraits of Mr. Rhodes, and a map of South Africa. London: Chapman & Hall, Ltd. vi+413 pp. Cr. 8vo. 1897.

The story of the life of Mr. Rhodes from his youth till the year 1896. Some of his mining experiences in Kimberley are narrated, and many anecdotes relating to his friendships show that even in early manhood he was observed to be a man of uncommon parts and ability. From the time of his entering Parliament his biography is practically a history of South Africa, and his life is identified with every incident of importance. The book follows out the various points of Mr. Rhodes' life-long duel with President Kruger, and much stress is laid on the intrigues of the Germans to obtain an influence in the Transvaal territory, and elsewhere in South Africa. With regard to the Jameson Raid, "Imperialist" discusses "the irregularity of the means employed in Mr. Rhodes' plan to make the Transvaal a free Republic," but does not consider that this "irregularity" should be taken very seriously. He asserts that Rhodes was forgiven by the Cape Dutchmen and is very severe on Mrs. Cronwright Schreiner, whom he accuses of vindictive falsehood in her work on the Matabele War, "Peter Halkett." There are some extracts from the statesman's best known speeches, and two chapters of personal reminiscences which are very interesting, being mainly about Rhodes' work in the expansion of the north.

An account of the political position of Mr. Rhodes, the position of the Progressive Party in the Cape Colony, together with a forecast of the prospects of Rhodesia in 1898. It is stated that "the mistake of the Raid was an earthquake shock, which in a moment brought to the ground the whole edifice of political power that had taken more than a decade to put together." The writer assumed that because the Progressives were in a majority in the Upper House of the Cape Colony, Mr. Rhodes had been returned to power, an assumption by no means borne out by events in subsequent years.

Although this volume contains a short biography of Mr. Rhodes, it is more especially devoted to the reproduction of his important political and financial speeches, with explanatory matter contributed by the compiler. It is noteworthy that from the earliest days of his public life, his speeches show that he was dominated by the aim of securing the hinterland of South Africa for the British Empire, with the ultimate object of a federation of the Colonies and Republics under the British flag. The opposition of Kruger, Reitz, and Hofmeyr to these ideals is discussed, and care is taken to fully show the influence these men brought to bear on the Afrikaners throughout South Africa, whilst a significant characteristic of Mr. Rhodes is the admiration he expresses for President Kruger for his courage in opposing him. The speeches dealing with the gradual development of Rhodesia afford a concise account of that country up to 1900, and the foresight and enterprise shown by the African statesman exhibit him in the most favourable light as one of the greatest of the public men of the nineteenth century. The speeches dealing with business matters are masterpieces of financial oratory, and the vigour and breadth of his political utterances explain the marvellous personal fascination and power which he exercised on all around him.

- *(RHODES, The Right Hon. C. J.): Mr. Rhodes and the Empire. Published by the "Morning Leader." London. 24 pp. 8vo. 1900.

A hostile criticism of Mr. Rhodes' career as "an Imperial factor," in which reference is made to his attitude on native affairs and his former connection with the Afrikaner Bond. It is asserted that he possessed "an unwavering and overmastering belief in the power of money, and an unflinching resolution to gain a certain end, irrespective of difficulty or scruple." It is contended that "what he has cost the Empire already is nothing to what he will cost the Empire, unless he is nationally disowned and discredited. . . . Mr. Rhodes and his methods have occupied the public attention far too long already. It is time that they were thrust aside. The power of money is great . . . but it is not everything. . . . There is an element of sanity and justice in the British race that . . . is still with us and will infallibly assert itself. When it does assert itself the country will awake . . . to marvel at its extraordinary infatuation."

Extracts from Mr. Rhodes' speech at Kimberley soon after the relief of the town. It is stated that the "pro-Boer press" had credited the speaker with "opinions and statements which any one acquainted with the man must know are untrue," and the pamphlet was published in order "that the public should learn what Mr. Rhodes really did say." The speaker remarked: "What is Pretoria Government? Simply President Kruger and a gang of Hollander placemen, steeped in corruption. The whole government is consequently rotten. The people have no voice. Even the Dutch people have no real voice. They have been deluded into the belief that their independence was threatened. . . ."

It was in this speech that Mr. Rhodes made his severely criticised allusion to "the best commercial asset in the world—the protection of her Majesty's flag."

The writer remarks that "There are very few among the sons of men who, born not in the list of kings and warriors and philosophers, have power within themselves to change profoundly the maps and minds of humanity. . . . Fewer still are men who have done these things unselfishly so that they shall lastingly endure. Among those chosen few I do not hesitate to write the name of Cecil Rhodes." It is stated that "the primary power, the mastering faculty of Rhodes was Imagination," and "he loved the land, the mere brown fertile mother soil, with all the curious passion of a Boer." In spite of the sometimes expressed hate of the Dutch for him, "he had a sympathy and understanding and an attraction for them which no other English leader in South Africa has ever possessed."

This biography carries the life of Mr. Rhodes nearly to its close, and thus embraces a wider scope than the earlier works by "Vindex" and "Imperialist." There is a sketch of the early history of the Rhodes family, and of the school and college days of the statesman, with an account of his business life in Kimberley before the commencement of his political career. The author states that "from the first day it was formed, the Afrikander Bond has been anti-British," and that Mr Rhodes' greatest ambition was to bring the Dutch and British sections of the South African population into closer union. Mr. Hensman is by no means an indiscriminate admirer of everything Cecil Rhodes did, and he is very severe with regard to the raid, which he calls "Jameson's foolhardy and criminal enterprise." With reference to this episode, the writer relates a rather curious conversation which he had with one of Jameson's followers, who said to him, "You see all we men were led to believe that the High Commissioner knew all that was going on, and I am convinced that Dr. Jim thought the same;" and continuing, he remarked, that when the letter came from the High Commissioner to stop Dr. Jameson, every one thought it was a "bluff" for the purpose of saving Sir Hercules Robinson and the Colonial Office in the eyes of foreign nations. The writer denies that Mr. Rhodes was ever hated by the Dutch, and draws attention to the way he was welcomed at many towns with large Boer populations after the raid; he considers, however, that he greatly under-estimated the power of President Kruger and his nation, and quotes him as having observed, "The notion of the Transvaal being able to trouble Great Britain at all seriously is too ridiculous."

Mr. Low, in giving his account of some conversations held between himself and Mr. Rhodes in London, states that "his actions and his place in history can be more impartially discussed by those who are entirely free from the curious attraction he exercised over all who came, for however brief a space, within the orbit of his personal influence." He speaks of his sensitiveness to criticism, and relates that he found him smarting from the attacks made on him by Truth and the Daily Chronicle; he considered, said the author, "that he was not properly appreciated in England," and remarked, "Jameson and I came home after giving a new Dominion to the Empire, and we found nobody took any notice of us." Mr. Low paints a very vivid picture of the conversational powers of the statesman, and says, "I lay back in my armchair, and listened fascinated while the rapid sentences poured out of the broad chest in curiously high notes that occasionally rose almost to a falsetto . . . a talker he was, of more compelling potency than almost any one it has been my lot to hear." He gives a graphic account of the appearance of Mr. Rhodes at the time of his visit to London soon after the Jameson Raid. "The big man, with the thatch of grey-brown hair, who paced up and down in his shirt-sleeves, was a pathetic, almost desolate figure. He was much changed by these few bitter weeks of suspense and suffering. Through the ruddy bronze of the sea wind and the veld breezes his cheeks showed grey and livid; he looked old and worn. 'We have made a mistake,' he said more than once. 'It was a failure; and shall I tell you why it was a failure? Because the fellows in Johannesburg were afraid.'"

The article brings the reader into close touch with Mr. Rhodes, and is remarkable for the life-like picture drawn. Many curious anecdotes are related, and the description of the great statesman's home life at Groot Schuur is particularly vivid and interesting. Mr. Garrett entertained a warm affection for him and was one of his greatest admirers, and he asserts that "No politician has ever had a record of more persistency and consistency than the record of Cecil Rhodes as a life-long worker for the British Empire. . . . Cecil Rhodes was no angel, but a big, rough-grained, strong-headed, great-hearted man."

A collection of the numerous reports, telegrams, and articles printed from day to day in the Diamond Fields Advertiser of Kimberley, on the "mournful and historic occasion of the death of Mr. Rhodes."

The title-page contains Rudyard Kipling's poem, "C. J. R.," and there is a chronological summary of the great statesman's career, and a special memoir, with reminiscences old and new, from the pen of the editor, and many other contributions. Many of the incidents are related for the first time in print, and well illustrate the varied characteristics and talents of Mr. Rhodes.

There is a full description of the lying-in-state in the Houses of Assembly and the funeral services in Cape Town, together with accounts of many of the addresses given by public personages, sermons by ministers of all denominations, resolutions passed by public bodies, and the leading articles of the Advertiser on the subject. The simple grandeur of the obsequies evoked the profoundest respect, and the description of the touching spectacle of the innumerable mourners doing homage to the memory of the greatest of South Africans, in every town all along the vast line of railways to the chief city of the empire he founded, affords a record of a national funeral unique in the annals of the civilised world.

There are a large number of portraits and views connected with Mr. Rhodes and his friends. Despite the differences of opinion that arose in latter years, the volume bears infinite testimony to the esteem and admiration in which the "greatest of Afrikanders" was held by the editor.

Finally, we would urge haste: we want to have a good time before the Rand is again in a position to swamp us." In addition to the opinions of leading Rhodesians, there are accounts of meetings held, at which the importation of Chinese was condemned.

Some account of the agitation for Railway Reform in Rhodesia. The efforts of the Committee succeeded in getting the narrow gauge line from Beira replaced by the standard gauge of the country, but it is asserted that the heavy rates charged by the Rhodesia Railways Trust are keeping back the country, and doing considerable harm to the agricultural prospects. The appendices give statistics of the rates charged for carriage on various African railway lines, and it would appear that in certain instances the Beira and Mashonaland railway charged three times the rates imposed by other lines.

- *RICARDE-SEAVER, F. I.: and METCALFE, Sir CHARLES: The British Sphere of Influence in South Africa. Ex. "The Fortnightly Review," vol. xlv., N.S., pp. 351-362, and map. By F. I. Ricarde-Seaver and Sir Charles Metcalfe, Bart. Roy. 8vo. 1889.

It is stated that Lord Knutsford, in replying to a deputation respecting certain territories in South Africa, remarked: "Sphere of influence is a term I do not wish to define now, but it amounts to this, we should not allow the Portuguese, Germans, or any foreign nation or republic to settle down and annex that territory." This dictum is interpreted as indicating that "the Government of Great Britain has at length awakened to the vast commercial importance of British interests in South Africa. . . . Bechuanaland would have been lost had it not been for the efforts of one or two far-seeing men. It is indeed vital to British interests in Africa that there should be an open road to the interior. The plans of the Transvaal Boers and the Germans . . . have been frustrated." The names of the rulers of the native races right up to the Zambesi are enumerated, and it is asserted that "All these chiefs are well disposed towards the English, and would welcome British rule if only as a protection against the raids of the freebooting Boers." It is asserted that the natives of Bechuanaland were alarmed at the proposed annexation of their country to the Cape Colony instead of it being placed under the protection of the Imperial Government, and that they recognised that "the preponderating influence in the (Cape) Legislative Assembly belongs to the Boer farmers, the strength of the Afrikaner party, which is anti-English, anti-progressive, and anti-humanitarian . . . Kruger . . . influences the Cape ministry through the Afrikaner Bond which is headed by Hofmeyr. The ministry are dependent on the support of Hofmeyr and his party, and are thus forced to become the tools of the Afrikaner Bond, and through them, of the President of the Transvaal. . . ." The authors advocated the formation of a Chartered Company to include the countries within the British sphere of influence, and maintained that "all the leading Europeans in South Africa would gladly join hands with such a company," which "would secure peace and prosperity, would protect the natives, and restrain the freebooting Boers. . . . The time is ripe for such an enterprise."

Dr. Ricards, Bishop of Retimo, and Vicar-Apostolic of the Eastern Vicariate of the Cape Colony. London: Burns & Oates. Dublin: M. H. Gill & Son. . . . (Sold for the benefit of the Catholic Native Missions in South Africa.) 127 pp. Cr. 8vo. 1879.

An account of the work of the Catholic Church in the Eastern districts of the Cape Colony within a vicariate extending from the Orange River to the Indian Ocean. The writer is not sure of the success of the mission as regards the natives, but considered that the Church has undoubtedly had great results from exertions amongst the white and Indian sections of the population. In order to explain the grave difficulties attending the missions amongst the Kaffirs, details are given of the history and customs of the native tribes, affording much information of a valuable nature. Reference is made to the rites of the Kaffir order of priesthood, and there is an account of the laws of inheritance and marriage. In stating that morality is at an extremely low ebb among the natives, it is mentioned that there is no Kaffir term for "virgin." There is a description of the Trappists who proposed to establish one of their communities among the Abatembu Kaffirs. One of the most interesting items of this little book is a translation of the history of the mission of Father Gonsalez Silveiro to the Kaffirs of Monomotapa. The narrative is taken from an old work entitled "Thesaurus Rerum Indicarum," by the Jesuit Father, Du Jarric, a Portuguese, and was published at Cologne in 1615. It contains an account of the conversion of the king and court to Christianity, and of the subsequent murder of Gonsalez Silveiro, together with a description of the miracles which are stated to have attended his death and the discovery of his remains.

This regiment was included in the thirty-five militia battalions embodied for service in South Africa, and, after some training at Aldershot, joined the transport Austral at Tilbury Docks, and left for the front. Cape Town was reached on March 9, 1900, and the battalion was ordered to encamp at Green Point to guard the Boer prisoners. Strong reinforcements had, by August 2nd, brought up the numbers of the battalion to 800, and about 250 of these went to Vryburg where, in the early stages of the war, "80 per cent. of the inhabitants rebelled and joined the Boer cause." Later on, the regiment formed part of the Kimberley garrison, and early in 1902 were sent to Beaufort West. On January 30th, Captains Constable and Crofton and 100 men left in charge of a convoy whose destination was Fraserburg, a distance of eighty miles. On February 7th the convoy was taken by the Boers, who attacked in great strength, and after they had taken what goods they required burnt the remainder, sending the captured British soldiers to Beaufort West in a dilapidated condition. The battalion left for England on March 1, 1902.

*RITCHIE, J. EWING : Imperialism in South Africa. . . . London : James Clarke & Co. . . . 31 pp. 8vo. 1879.

The author quotes largely from Aylward's "Transvaal of To-day," and evidently adopted the views inculcated in that volume, on the subject of the first annexation of the Transvaal. He alludes to the British School of Imperial politicians of whom Sir Bartle Frere, Sir Theophilus Shepstone, and Sir Arthur Cunynghame were stated to be notable examples in South Africa, and he urges that before "the British taxpayer has parted with his last farthing it is well to pause and ask, what are the results of Imperialism in South Africa, and whether the investment is remunerative." Much stress is laid on the character of the Boers, which, according to Mr. Ritchie, is that of "a primitive, pastoral people," and he asserts that "their plan of getting rid of the native difficulty was a very effective one. They either made the native a slave or they drove him away." Many anecdotes are related to prove the simplicity of the Boers, and reference is made to their invincible dislike of the British, which, it is stated, "was remarkably dominant among the women." Fresh friction is prophesied with the Burghers, the writer remarking with some foresight, "Clearly, when we have settled with Cetywayo, we shall have a little trouble with the free people of the Transvaal."

Mr. Ritchie did not visit the Transvaal, and his grasp of South African problems appears to have been slender in the extreme.

Only thirty-three pages out of these two large volumes are allotted to a description of "Southern Africa and the Islands of the Indian and South Atlantic Oceans," and the information afforded is neither valuable nor accurate. It is stated that some 251 boreholes had been executed for the army during the South African War, and that owing to the success of the operations it was hoped that a "thoroughly trained Water Boring Corps" would be formed.

ROBERTS, Field-Marshal FREDERICK SLEIGH, Earl ROBERTS: Proclamation to the Burghers of the Orange Free State. Broad-sheet—Elephant Folio. 1900. BRITISH MUSEUM LIBRARY.

Published in English and Dutch.

Lord Roberts in this proclamation reviews the previous relations of Great Britain with the Orange Free State, and asserts that the Republic "was guilty of a wanton and unjustifiable invasion of British territory." He declares that Great Britain has no quarrel with the inhabitants, and that the whole responsibility of what had occurred rested with the Government of the Orange Free State. He warns the burghers not to oppose Great Britain and to return to their homes, and promises that any grievance they may suffer will be redressed.

- *ROBERTS, MORLEY: Taken by Assault; or, The Fugitives. By Morley Roberts. London: Sands & Co. . . . 128 pp. 8vo. 1903.

- *ROBERTS, MORLEY: A Tramp's Note-Book. . . . London: F. V. White & Co., Ltd. vi+312 pp. Cr. 8vo. 1904.

Amongst the chapters there are a few referring to South Africa, and these include, "In Capetown," "Veldt, Plain and Prairie," "Near Mafeking," and "A Talk with Kruger." The author's interview with the Boer statesman took place in September 1898. He had been told that he would not get much conversation out of the President unless he drew him out by referring to Mr. Rhodes, which he duly did, whereupon Kruger "lost his stolidity and became voluble and emphatic. Rhodes was evidently his sore point, and he abused him with fervour and with emphasis. All trouble in this wicked world was due to Rhodes. . . . Rhodes was a bad man, whose chief aim was to drag the English flag in the dirt. Rhodes was Apollyon and a financier, and the foul fiend himself."

London: Printed for Sherwood, Neely & Jones. . . . xvi+460 pp. 8vo. 1819.

The appendix on the Cape contains seventy-three pages, but it is stated that the account was not drawn up by Mr. Robertson, and was included on account of the interest excited by the Parliamentary grant lately carried for the purposes of the scheme for emigration to the Eastern Province of the Cape Colony. There is some description of the various districts of the Colony, with particulars of the "Africanes," as the white colonists are called. The writer does not draw a pleasant picture of the Boers, and Mr. Theal observes that his account "is so full of errors as to be valueless."

Compiled chiefly from letters and journals written to the late Bishop Mackenzie and his sisters. Edited by Anne Mackenzie. Cambridge: Deighton, Bell & Co. London: Bell and Daldy. xv + 380 pp. Cr. 8vo. 1866.

The subject of the memoir was married to the Rev. R. Robertson in 1855, and joined him in his missionary work amongst the natives of Natal and Zululand; she was killed, after a useful career, in a waggon accident at the Tugela River in 1864. The volume gives much information respecting the social, religious, and political condition of the Zulus at this period, together with interesting notes on Panda and Cetywayo, and other prominent natives.

A curious little collection of essays, written in Cape Town about the middle of the nineteenth century, and mainly illustrative of that town and its suburbs at that period. One of the chapters deals with the state of the Cape Town Library, drawing attention to the lack of a proper catalogue, and criticising the selection of new books acquired from time to time.

- *ROBERTSON, JOHN M.: Wrecking the Empire. By J. M. Robertson. London: Grant Richards. xlvi + 313 pp. 8vo. 1901.

A long and comprehensive account of the alleged misdeeds of the British in the South African War, their insults to the Dutch, their iniquities under martial law, their insolence to Boer sympathisers, the partisanship of Sir Alfred Milner and his ministers, their "mania of suspicion," &c. &c. The volume is compiled from letters written to the Morning Leader, the greater number of which were published under the signature "Scrutator."

- *ROBERTSON, JOHN M.: The Truth about the War. An open letter to Dr. A. Conan Doyle. By John M. Robertson. . . . London: The New Age Press. . . . 48 pp. 8vo. 1902.

The author assails Dr. Conan Doyle, and endeavours to prove that he has wilfully misrepresented the case of the Boers from first to last.

- *ROBINS, WILLIAM: The Truth about the Transvaal. Gathered from the despatches between the British and Boer Governments, and the official report of the Bloemfontein Conference. An address delivered, by request, at Windsor, Ontario, Canada, February 6th, 1900, by William Robins . . . and printed for the benefit of "The Soldiers of the Queen Relief Fund." Ninth Edition. London: Effingham Wilson. . . . New York: Brentano. . . . Toronto (Canada): Wm. Tyrrel & Co. 43 pp. Roy. 8vo. 1900.

The speaker discussed "The alleged grievances of British subjects in the Transvaal," "The British claim of suzerainty," "The insincerity of the Boer Government," "What can be said for the Boers?" "What can be said for England?" and "What is England fighting for?" He made it clear that he was not discussing the Boers as a race, but merely their government, and remarked, "I shall find it necessary to say some rather severe things about the conduct of the Transvaal Government . . . if I do not bring out anything to their credit, it is simply because I have been absolutely unable to find anything . . . their part in these negotiations is the most amazing chronicle of persistent bad faith which ever came under my observation."

The author states that in the year 1862 he addressed considerable audiences in the United Kingdom upon the position and prospects of the Colony of Natal. He remarks that he was frequently requested to publish a résumé of these lectures in a cheap form, and has endeavoured to embody in the volume "a truthful description of Natal" at that period.

With inscription, "With the Publisher's Compts." The name of Sir H. Barkly, K.C.B., is written on the fly-leaf.

There is a full description of the estates and plantations of the colony, with much information respecting the individual farmers and their crops, and other interesting matter. A portion of the volume is devoted to an account of a trip to the then newly discovered diamond fields of Griqualand West. The writer reached Du Toit's Pan on June 9, 1871, and he gives an animated sketch of the scenes at the new diggings. A letter from a digger written in December 1871 is reproduced; it is headed, "The great Camp at Colesberg Kop," and gives an early description of the Kimberley mine and the township. It is stated that some of the claims were valued at prices obtained for quarters of claims which would bring them up to £3000 for a full claim, while "thousands of tents of all sizes and shapes are pitched round the kopje."

A romance dealing with the early days of Natal and the Dutch Republics. It is stated that some of the incidents related actually occurred, and set forth "the substantial truth, unspiced by sensationalism and unconstrained by the rules of constructive art." Sir John Robinson remarks in his autobiography that "the book was hardly to be regarded as a success," partly "owing . . . to the prevailing indifference . . . to colonial subjects" at the time of its publication, and in a measure because it was neither all fact nor all fiction."

An able and interesting paper on the Colony. Amongst those who took part in the subsequent discussion were Sir Arthur Cunynghame, Sir Henry Barkly, Dr. Langham Dale, Mr. G. P. Moodie, Mr. Anthony Trollope, and others.

An interesting paper, written admittedly from "a Colonist's Point of View." In the course of the article the writer deals separately with the Cape Colony, Natal, the Orange Free State, and the Transvaal, and then takes a "Survey of South Africa as a whole," maintaining that within ten years (1877-1887) cardinal changes have taken place, and that while "Race feeling is fast subsiding . . . the native power as a cohesive force has disappeared." It is pointed out that "Gold discoveries" promise to "revolutionise the financial and commercial conditions of the Transvaal," and it is predicted "That the time is not far distant when the two republics . . . will find it to their interest to enter into terms of closer relationship with the seaboard colonies."

The author was brought to South Africa when a child, with one of Bryne's emigration parties, and subsequently his father founded the Natal Mercury, one of the most important papers in South Africa. Sir John's political life was practically the history of Natal for the last half of the nineteenth century, as he entered public life at an early age, being only twenty-four years old when he was elected a member of the Legislative Assembly for Durban. The volume gives a valuable account of the political and general history of Natal, and all the difficulties and triumphs of the colony are faithfully recorded, while the political advance of the country is carefully traced to its consummation—Representative Government—in 1893. The writer was a sincere admirer of Sir Bartle Frere's South African policy, and strongly criticises Mr. Froude's misrepresentations and fallacies.

- *ROBINSON, Sir J. B. : The South African Settlement. Ex. "The Contemporary Review," No. 418, pp. 457-467. Roy. 8vo. Oct. 1900.

The author, a South African capitalist and leader of an important group of Transvaal mines, was in former times a prominent politician in the Cape Colony, and actively connected with diamond-mining in Kimberley. He was not, however, in any way connected with the De Beers group, and was not in political sympathy with Mr. Rhodes. Apparently there was little love lost between the two men, and in a conversation with Mr. Sidney Low (see Contemporary Review, May 1902), Mr. Rhodes said, referring to the Jameson Raid, "I wasn't taking all this trouble to turn out old Kruger and put J. B. Robinson . . . in his place," and when giving evidence before the Raid Committee, he repeated this remark with some variation. The writer remarks, "We have arrived at the point of victory, when it can no longer be dreamed, except by the most ignorant, that any arrangement we may make is dictated by fear," and he advocates a series of concessions likely to be of assistance in bringing about peace.

The 91st Highlanders, afterwards the 1st Battalion Princess Louise's Argyle and Sutherland Highlanders, was raised by the Duke of Argyll and other noblemen and gentlemen in the year 1794. A year later the new force was sent to South Africa, where it took part in the capture of the Cape under General Craig. Returning to Europe, they paid a second visit to South Africa in 1839, and a reserve battalion, sent out to augment the regiment, narrowly escaped destruction in the wreck of the Abercrombie Robinson, near Salt River. In June 1843 the troops were sent to Kaffraria, where they were engaged in minor expeditions, but later on they went through the Kaffir War of 1846-7, and in 1848 took part in the battle of Boomplaats. Two years after they were again engaged—in the Kaffir War of 1850-1-2—and finally, after thirteen years' service in South Africa, the regiment was ordered home and "redistributed." Shortly after the marriage of Princess Louise, the 91st regiment was called by its new name, and in 1879 was sent again to South Africa to take part in the Zulu War.

An account of a waggon journey from Pietermaritzburg through the Orange Free State and the Transvaal, 1875-6. This account of the Jameson Raid is preceded by the manifesto of the “Transvaal National Union,” and there is a detailed description of the scenes in Johannesburg after the issue of that document. The account of the battle of Doornkop was furnished to the author by Mr. Beavan, an eye-witness of the engagement, who was arrested by the Boers for complicity, but afterwards released. The result of the fight appears to have been hastened by the jamming of the Chartered Company’s Maxims a little before the Boer artillery arrived. There is also an account of the fight by Mr. Percy Farrar, who was taken prisoner at Doornkop although only an onlooker, but was released soon afterwards by General Joubert. It is stated that “The last words uttered by Dr. Jameson when the flag of truce went up . . . were, ‘There goes my life’!”

An attempt to throw light on the vexed political and financial questions of the Transvaal at this period. The pamphlet concludes with a reprint of a paper published in Le Correspondant entitled “The Transvaal and the Rights of the People,” by M. Arthur Desjardins.

This work deals with the geology of the surveyed portion of Cape Colony, but is “necessarily incomplete for large areas in the Colony, including the whole of the country north of the Orange River,” as “immense tracts in the north-western, midland, and eastern districts have not yet been surveyed, and nothing more than the broad outlines of their geology is known.” The volume contains twenty-one plates, a geological map, a bibliography, and an index.

In the course of the paper it is observed that Lord Chelmsford remarked in a discussion on machine guns : " In the battle of Gingilhovo, when I was marching to the relief of Etchowe, it is only fair to say that the Gatling gun, under the charge of the Naval Brigade, did very good service indeed, as was shown afterwards by the number of dead Zulus found on the ground which had been exposed to its fire. . . . I can safely say, at all events, in such wars as we have to carry on in South Africa, that machine guns attached to infantry . . . would be of inestimable value."

A criticism of an article in the Quarterly Review (January 1877), which descanted on " the favourable side of the Boer's character," together with a statement of the author's views on the political position in South Africa at this period. Lord Blachford discusses the dismissal of the Molteno ministry by Sir Bartle Frere, and, in a summary of his opinions, contends that —

1. " A close alliance with the Boers is . . . impracticable except on terms which make it inadvisable ;
2. " That the annexation of the Diamond Fields, defensible in itself, has no substantial connection with the recent wars ; and
3. " That there is sufficient ground for hoping that the establishment of responsible government will not cause . . . the evil consequences which are assigned to it."

Lord Blachford criticises Sir Bartle Frere's policy in Natal, and was evidently of opinion that the war was brought about in order to destroy the military system of Zululand, which was regarded as a menace to South Africa in general and Natal in particular, whilst the Ultimatum sent to Cetywayo and the Zulus was of such a nature that no compliance with its terms could have been expected. The writer demonstrated the manner in which the first annexation of the Transvaal practically forced Great Britain into the position of supporting the claims of the Dutch to the territory which had been in dispute between the Boers and Cetywayo, and thus, "by a kind of political necessity," the Empire became "obliged to take over with the Transvaal the ill-omened traditions of Boer policy," forfeiting "our own best inheritance—our reputation amongst natives for justice and moderation, which we have acquired of late years in the Cape, and had always enjoyed in Natal."

Frederick Rogers, afterwards Lord Blachford, was born in 1811. His father, a younger brother, succeeded Sir John Rogers in the baronetcy and the Blachford property, and these eventually passed to his son Frederick. He was educated at Eton (two of his chosen companions there being Arthur Hallam and W. E. Gladstone), and at Oriel College, Oxford, and he became an intimate and life-long friend of J. H. (afterwards Cardinal) Newman. In the year 1844 he was appointed Under-Secretary to the Colonial Office and Emigration Commissioner, and in May 1860 he accepted the post of Permanent Under-Secretary for the Colonies, which position he resigned in 1871, at the age of sixty; in 1871 Sir Frederick was raised to the peerage by Mr. Gladstone.

Lord Blachford considered that Lord Carnarvon made a great mistake in sending Froude out to the Cape on his semi-official mission, and in a letter to Sir Henry Taylor he remarks that the historian was "a man who would take up a view and work it, not with reference to truth and practical success, but with reference to scenic effect. . . . I cannot imagine a more unpersuasive person."

On the subject of the annexation of the Transvaal, Lord Blachford was of the opinion that it was premature, and he writes, "My own impression would have been to have allowed the Boers to drink rather more deeply of the cup they have mixed for themselves. . . . And then I should have strengthened myself and waited." He did not at all agree with Sir Bartle Frere's policy, and remarks, "I do not think Indian administrators understand the conditions under which Colonial Government has to be carried on," and referring to his recall he remarks, "If Frere's presence in South Africa was good for the public, it might not be wise to sacrifice the Colony to departmental discipline. But I think he is a mischief, and that his recall is in itself a good. Nothing I can conceive—or rather infer—will make him carry into effect, with reasonable loyalty, a policy that is not his own." With reference to the Boer outbreak in 1881 he writes (March 9, 1881), "I only hope they will not adopt the Protectorate scheme, which, according to the old precedent, will disable us from controlling the Boers, and compel us to protect them from the consequences of their misdoings."

Rogers arrived in Cape Town on December 27, 1710, and gives "a short description of the Cape of Good Hope." He remarks of the Dutch, "Their form of Government, their Industry and Neatness, is justly to be admired and imitated. I saw nothing I could blame, unless it be their severity, for which no doubt they have very good reason, tho' it seemed harsh to me, who was born with English liberty."

An account of a lady's stay in South Africa during part of the South African War. It is stated that the Cape Town officials did not join in the general rejoicing on the occasions of British successes, but that they did so on the Relief of Ladysmith, "from very shame." After a short stay at Wellington the writer went to Kimberley, where she conducted a Convalescent Home for invalided soldiers, and there is a bright and cheery account of life in the diamond city in the period immediately succeeding the relief of the town. With regard to the hospital arrangements of the army, it is remarked that the "Orderly system was rotten . . . any woman is by nature a better nurse than the average man," and it is asserted that at the commencement of the war hundreds of good nurses volunteered for the front, but were told that they were not wanted. The orderlies are charged with taking stimulants provided for the patients, as well as milk and other necessities and luxuries, and it is alleged that many of the men serving in that capacity were themselves invalids, and incapable of any exertion. Lady Maud left Kimberley for Bloemfontein, having received intelligence to the effect that her husband was wounded. She spent many days in endeavouring to ascertain his whereabouts, but there was evidently great confusion prevailing in the Free State Columns, and it appears to have been almost impossible to obtain reliable information as to the location of any particular body of men. After many adventures, however, the missing officer was discovered at Kroonstad, from which place he was finally invalided home. Attention is drawn to the somewhat marked self-esteem of some of the colonists with reference to their services during the campaign. It is hinted that they seemed to think that they were "colonials" and not "colonists," and that to that fact they owed many of their successes. The author remarks that they were merely Englishmen, "living where their daily mode of life gives them immense advantages in this present war," and she observes that she would like to try their mettle in a European war, being of opinion that they would do as well, and neither more nor less, than other Englishmen.

Introduction by Lord Stanmore, G.C.M.G. With seventeen illustrations. London : David Nutt. . . . xii + 384 pp. 8vo. 1893.

The bulk of the volume deals with the author's life in the Pacific Isles, most of which is recorded in a series of entertaining letters. The first of the South African communications is dated from Vryburg, June 7, 1891, and others are written from Palachwe, Macloutsie Camp, and Forts Tuli, Salisbury, and Victoria. They convey a good impression of pioneer life in Rhodesia during the first settlement of the country, and there is a short description of the abortive "Boer Trek." The author arrived back in England in January 1892, but died a few months later. The illustrations are mostly taken from drawings by A. L. Gordon, Esq., C.M.G., but there is a portrait of H. H. Romily "from a wash drawing, by Leslie Ward (1891)."

*ROOKE, Major HENRY : Travels to the Coast of Arabia Felix, and from thence by the Red Sea and Egypt to Europe. Containing a short account of an expedition undertaken against the Cape of Good Hope. In a series of letters by Henry Rooke, Esq., late Major of the 100th Regiment of Foot. Second edition, with additions. London: Printed for R. Blamire, in the Strand. xi + 222 pp. 8vo. 1784.

The volume contains some particulars regarding the expedition despatched with the object of the capture of the Cape, and which sailed from Spithead on March 13, 1781, under Commodore George Johnstone. The English fleet was attacked by a French squadron at Port Praya, but the latter was defeated and fled to Simon's Bay. After refitting, the British fleet sailed for the Cape and captured a Dutch fleet in Saldanha Bay, also the large Dutch ship the Held Woltemaade; it was, however, not thought advisable to attack the French fleet in Table Bay, and the expedition eventually left South Africa, the troops being despatched to India with part of the fleet and the rest sailing for England. Major Rooke was highly impressed with the value of the Cape as a colonial possession, and remarks that as "the station of a squadron, and the nursery of an army," it might "effectually guard the entrance of the Indian Ocean"; and he asserts that Great Britain "should not yet think her superiority firmly established or her possessions perfectly secure from her European rivals while the Cape is in the hands of her enemies."

The writer asserts that "The Dutch settlers at the Cape of Good Hope and the English settlers on the Atlantic coast of North America found themselves thrown back into a stage of life where hunting was one of the main means of livelihood, as well as the most exciting and adventurous of pastimes. These men knew the chase as no men of their race had known it since the days before history dawned; and until the present decades of the present century, the American and the Africander of the frontier largely led the lives of professional hunters. Oom Paul (Paul Kruger) and Buffalo Bill (F. W. Cody) have led very different careers since they reached middle age; but in their youth warfare against wild beasts and wild men was the most serious part of the life work of both."

- *ROOT, J. W.: The South African Labour Question. . . . (Radix Series, No. 4.) Liverpool: J. W. Root. . . . 31 pp. 8vo. 1903.

It is maintained that Mr. Chamberlain did not definitely settle the two great problems he was confronted with during his visit to South Africa, i.e., Labour and Taxation. The writer considers it "a strange anomaly that in a country where labour receives a higher rate of remuneration than in any other in the world, there should be such a dearth of it." In his opinion, one of the principal reasons is, "the divergence between the prices of skilled and unskilled labour," or more plainly speaking, the difference between the wages of white and black men. The author asserts that under present conditions a mechanic in South Africa having a wife and family, and earning 25s. a day, is little better off than if he had remained in England or Scotland at the same wage per week. He disputes the often quoted expression to the effect that "South Africa is a white man's country," stating that as far as numerical preponderance is concerned, South Africa is a "black man's country," and had every appearance of remaining so.

Rose (late President of the Witwatersrand Mine Employés and Mechanics' Union). London: E. B. Rose. . . . "Morning Leader" Publication Department. . . . vii + 358 pp. Cr. 8vo. 1902.

An account of the Anglo-Boer dispute presented from the pro-Boer standpoint. The writer states that "The truth about the Transvaal has never yet been fully told," but remarks, "I do claim, and I believe justly, . . . that practically all the salient facts regarding the subject matter of the book will be found in it, including a large number of facts which have never yet been published."

It is not often that the late Boer Government is praised for being "essentially democratic in its sympathies," but the writer seems quite convinced that he is correct in his assumption. He considers that the position of working men will be worse under British rule than they were under the Boer régime, and allusion is made to Lord Kitchener's regulations for re-starting the working of the mines, and the decision that 5s. a day and rations was to be the maximum wage under temporary circumstances. It is argued that "the mere fact that such a rate has been accepted at all will tend to make that rate, rather than the previously existing one, a basis of negotiations in a subsequent movement having for its object an increase in wages," and it is suggested that the hours of labour would be augmented, and that native labour would compete with white in the future.

by the South African Press Committee . . . and "Morning Leader" Pamphlet Department. . . . (London). 16 pp. 12mo. 1904.

The writer remarks, "What may we expect if the mine-owners are allowed to compound the Chinese and keep them close prisoners as this infamous ordinance will enable them to do." It is asserted that the mine-owners crush in a ruthless manner any one who exhibits anything like independence, and it is stated that Messrs. J. R. Pakeman, Storey, and Money Penny, editors respectively of the Transvaal Leader, the Rand Daily Mail, and the Star (the three leading Rand dailies), and Mr. J. Scobie, editor of the Transvaal Advertiser of Pretoria, have had to resign their positions, "in consequence of their unwillingness to endorse the policy of their employers, the mine-owners." The nation is asked, "Is it for this that over 4500 heroic Boers sacrificed their lives on the altar of their national independence? Is it for this . . . that over 20,000 women and children were done to death in our concentration camps?"

Mr. Herbert Spencer having suggested to the Right Hon. Leonard Courtney that "A comparison should be made between the constitution and acts of the so-called Boer oligarchy and the oligarchy which existed in England prior to the Reform Bill of 1832," Mr. Rose has drawn up in two parallel columns his view of the conditions existing in the two countries. It is stated that we shall "succeed in conciliating the Boers according to the extent that we retain the laws and constitutions to which they have been accustomed, and that not only are they by no means the "nation of barbarians, if not savages" that they have been represented, but that the British Government in destroying their nationality is "destroying the nearest approach to essentially democratic government the world has ever seen."

- *ROSEBERY, The Right Hon. Lord: National Policy. A speech delivered at Chesterfield, Dec. 16th, 1901. By Lord Rosebery. Authorised edition with prefatory note. London: Arthur L. Humphreys. . . . 39 pp. 8vo. 1902.

The speaker, in referring to the alleged unpopularity of Great Britain amongst other nations at this time, argued that "the peoples of Europe were under the impression, which has been falsely communicated to them, that the war we are engaged in was a war conducted by a powerful empire, animated by greed and lust of gold, against two feeble Republics." Lord Rosebery went on to say that he did not know whether this idea could have been dispelled, and asserted that nothing was done to try and dispel it. In his opinion, "at the beginning of the war the Government should have addressed to the King's agents abroad a despatch recapitulating all the steps we had taken to obtain justice for our fellow-countrymen in the Transvaal . . . winding up with . . . the unprovoked attack of the Boer Government on British territory." He criticised the tactlessness of the British Government, and in some cases that of British Generals in the field, the neglect shown regarding President Kruger's preparations for war, and the charge against certain members of the opposition of prolonging the war. With reference to the peace proposals he said, "The Boers are a very shrewd people . . . and I venture to say that there is not a sane Boer, who is not under the influence of fanaticism, who does not know as well as you or I that their independence is gone for ever."

In remarking on the position of the Liberal Opposition in 1902, it is observed that "Sir Henry Campbell Bannerman, who succeeded Sir William Harcourt as leader of the Opposition, had proved a comparative failure owing to the line he adopted on the South African War. The eyes of all patriotic Liberals turned to Lord Rosebery. . . . It is generally admitted that he and his followers . . . are the only possible alternative to a Conservative Government, and will alone command the confidence of an Imperialistic community."

- *ROSE-INNES, COSMO: With Paget's Horse to the Front. By Cosmo Rose-Innes, Trooper. London: John Macqueen. . . . 180 pp. Cr. 8vo. 1901.

Mr. Rose-Innes states that "Paget's Horse" was a "gentleman corps," raised among others to help to crush the last sustained effort of the Boers. The account of the red tape encountered at the War Office is very curious, and allusion is made to "the weeks wasted," and the oaths, declarations, and acres of forms of proposals which had to be signed before any one was allowed to enlist. The corps does not appear to have been engaged in any of the more important actions, but seems to have been always moving about, the author remarking, "Whether we were hunting Delarey or De Wet, or they were hunting us, I have never learned." He does not appear to have been an ardent admirer of the Veld, and observes, "Dismal is the Karroo beyond all conception . . .," it "deadens the brain with a feeling of hopeless despair." Referring to the behaviour of some of our soldiers, Mr. Rose-

Innes tells of a Major who, coming into a farm-house while the troops were being entertained by a Boer lady of British descent, "roughly warned her that should any shot be fired from that or any farm in the neighbourhood, every farm in the district would be burnt down," and he comments on the "genial sort of remark to your hostess" made by this officer. A touching picture is drawn of the distress of the women, girls, and children of a Boer farm at the destruction of their home; but the reader is asked to remember "that these sad-faced women but a few days before had with glee loaded the rifles with which their men from this very farm had killed some of our comrades-in-arms."

The author states that "nothing is further from the truth than the assumption that all those who think that the Republics should be brought within the Empire at the termination of these hostilities either desired the war originally, or had any designs upon republican independence in the past. . . . Now that war has come we are forced to the conclusion that the independence of the Republics ought not to be allowed to continue . . . to ensure permanent peace for South Africa." Mr. (afterwards Sir J.) Rose-Innes proposed a resolution which read as follows: "As British subjects, assembled in public meeting, we desire to express our entire concurrence with the refusal of Her Majesty's Ministers to allow the South African Republic and the Orange Free State to retain their independence; and we hereby declare our solemn conviction that the incorporation of these states within the dominions of the Queen can alone secure peace, prosperity, and public freedom throughout South Africa." In the course of the speaker's remarks he observed that the resolution meant "that two flags that have been wont to fly in South Africa in the past shall fly there no more. . . . What the Transvaal Boer means by the independence of his State is a continuance of the ruling caste. . . . The only solution of the matter is for the Republics to come within the British Empire. . . . Race feeling is going to be bitter whatever settlement you make after what has taken place; but will it be more on the plan we propose than if you allow the Transvaal to remain an independent State, a focus for all distrust and discontent in South Africa."

The author expresses an opinion that "the appreciation of the Boer character to be derived from the study of their past deeds—good and bad—will furnish the reader with a key which will unlock many of the problems connected with recent history in South Africa."

- *ROWLEY, Rev. HENRY: The Religion of the Africans . . .
London: W. Wells Gardner. . . . 191 pp. 12mo. N.D. (1877).

This volume is, in the main, a compilation giving the views of almost every author, traveller, or missionary who has placed on record his opinions upon the subject of religion among the aborigines of the continent of Africa.

The author remarks that "the difficulty in arriving at the religious beliefs of the Africans is great":—(1) They have no "record nor writing, nor notions of either. . . . Their traditions live from mouth to mouth." . . . (2) The Africans are "very reticent upon their religious beliefs and customs. . . ." It is conjectured that these people must have been separated from the main body of the human race at a very early period in the history of mankind, and their ignorance of writing and architecture might account to an extent for the crude character of their religious ideas.

The principal matters discussed in the work deal with the opinions and beliefs of the aborigines of Africa in reference to God, good and evil spirits, spirits of the dead men, witchcraft, and fetishism.

The appendix mentions some "features of the religious beliefs of the Africans which find expression in certain customs of widespread and most ancient usage," and it is remarked that, with regard to the practice of the rite of circumcision among them, that "it is not improbable that it is derived from a period even anterior to that when the observance was by a divine communication enforced upon Abraham and his descendants."

The first news of the Boer rebellion was received in Pretoria on Saturday, 13th November 1880. The outbreak occurred at Potchefstroom, and on the following day about a hundred men and two guns were despatched to that town. The force arrived on November 18th, having taken ninety-six hours to cover 104 miles. On the 20th, forty-nine additional men arrived. Hostilities did not commence till December 15th, but some days after the arrival of the troops, a fort was ordered to be built, in which were placed the commissariat stores and hospital. By this time about twenty special constables had been enrolled from the inhabitants of the town, who were, however, nearly all sympathetic to the Boer cause; the twenty loyalists were under Commandant Raafe, C.M.G., the entire forces being led by Colonel Winsloe. The Boers held possession of the town with the exception of the Landrost's office and the gaol, which were under the command of Major Clarke and Lieut. Hay respectively. The former surrendered to General Cronje on December 18th, Lieut. Hay retiring to the fort. On December 24th, the women and children left the garrison and returned to the town, but the defence of the fort was maintained until the 21st March, when the troops being threatened with sickness and starvation, and there being only eight bags of rotten mealies left as the sole food supply for over two hundred souls, Colonel Winsloe decided to surrender. The "garrison marched out with the honours of war, their flag flying, and bugles playing . . . being received by General Cronje and the Burgher forces under his command with shouldered arms." They "then marched into the Orange Free State, the troops retaining their flag and the officers their swords." Every assistance was given by the Boers in procuring food for the garrison and medicine and comforts for the sick and wounded. The number of Boers at the commencement of the siege was about 800, from which time the numbers of the invaders fluctuated from 1400 to 400, which was the minimum force of the enemy. There are plans of the town, fort, and gunpits.

A description of the Transvaal and its inhabitants, written shortly before the whole aspect of the country was completely changed by the discovery of the Witwatersrand goldfields. The author states that the Afrikanders regarded the first annexation of the Transvaal as "a summer frolic. . . . If the Boers had desired the annexation surely they would have made some demonstration of welcome, or have laid some surety of their desire at the feet of their new rulers. . . . The conciliatory proclamations of the annexation held out promises to them which never the least attempt was made to fulfil. . . . There has been no disinterested desire to raise the Boers for their own gain or happiness ; rather was the principal idea to eject them or crush them to submission, and that in as summary a manner as possible."

The author accompanied his father (in the year 1850) to the colony, in the Minerva, which went ashore off the "Bluff" at Durban, just after all the passengers had been landed. The volume contains a large amount of information respecting Natal in the middle of the nineteenth century.

The author of this interesting novel has certainly not erred on the side of leniency in judging and depicting the character of the Boers, but the description of the brutality shown to the natives is probably somewhat exaggerated. The spirit of lawlessness exhibited by the Burghers portrayed in the tale was no doubt characteristic of certain men living at this period in the bush country near the Portuguese territory, and in other remote districts of the Republic.

- *RUSSELL, JOHN, Earl RUSSELL : Copies of Correspondence with Lord John Russell on Representative Government at the Cape. London : Trelawny Saunders. . . . 63 pp. Cr. 8vo. 1851.

A series of letters between Lord John Russell and Messrs. A. Stockenstrom and J. Fairbairn on the subject of certain proposed alterations in the legislature of the Cape Colony. The two latter gentlemen were deputed by the inhabitants of the Cape to plead their cause with reference to the creation of free legislative institutions, to replace a government of nominal representatives, which seems to have been thoroughly unpopular and entirely discredited. They represented that "The Colony, its Government, and its neighbourhood" were thoroughly disorganised, and contended that the Kaffir War could not end or be brought to a satisfactory settlement till the constitution is guaranteed. . . . In reply, Lord John urged that "nothing can be more fixed than the determination of Her Majesty's Government to establish representative institutions at the Cape," but he observed that as the Governor, Sir Harry Smith, was engaged in war in Kaffraria, he could not assemble Parliament at the Cape. The concluding letter of Messrs. Stockenstrom and Fairbairn is exceedingly firm in tone, and complains bitterly of the attitude of Lord Grey, the Secretary of State for the Colonies, and the following very significant passage occurs in the communication : "Lord Grey may be assured that he has a loyal and longsuffering people to deal with, but 'I will, and it shall be,' is no longer possible at the Cape."

This work was prepared by "the desire of the Council of Education of the Colony of Natal," for the purpose of helping "the young people of the colony to acquire a knowledge of their homeland, and to encourage them to take intelligent interest in all that makes for its welfare and progress." "The Story" is taken from Mr. John Bird's "Annals of Natal," and was revised by Sir Theophilus Shepstone, and there is a detailed history of the colony, necessarily interwoven with that of the neighbouring colonies and republics. The scope of the volume embraces the discovery of the Cape and Natal, the history of the native races, the great trek, and the founding of the Dutch Republics, and the history is continued down to the year 1888, and includes notes on the formation of the British South Africa and the British East Africa Companies. A feature of the work is a table of dates of important events, which is placed at the end of each chapter.

(Reprinted from the "Canada Lancet," November 1900, and the "Canadian Practitioner and Review," Oct. 1900. 16 pp. 16mo. (1900.)

Dr. Ryerson, who was personally thanked by Lord Roberts for his services during the early part of the South African War, gave an interesting address entitled "The Medical Side of the South African War," soon after his return to Canada. He pointed out that, contrary to the popular notion, the physician is more required in warfare than the surgeon, as, up to July 25, 1900, 4867 officers and men died of disease, as against 3463 who died in action or of wounds. In view of the attacks on the medical service during the campaign, it is satisfactory to find from the statistics that the figures compare very favourably with those of other campaigns, notably the Crimean, Spanish-American, and American Civil Wars, and it is good-humouredly suggested that the medical profession "should be eternally grateful" to Mr. Burdett-Coutts "for affording an opportunity for public examination of its merits." It is stated that "the epidemic of enteric fever which raged in South Africa can be traced to the three months the army lay at Modder River." In the article entitled "Some Surgical Experiences in the War in South Africa," which was read before the Canadian Medical Association at Ottawa, September 1900, it was remarked that it is questionable whether explosive bullets were used with the Mausers, and it is affirmed that at a short range the Mauser bullet is of an explosive character; when it meets a hard substance especially "the impact is terrible, and causes the bullet to fly into a thousand pieces."

Saar visited Cape Town on his homeward voyage, and devotes four pages of this volume to the Cape. His narrative is confined to the first eighty-eight pages of the work; pages 91-130 are devoted to descriptions of the travels of Volkert Evertsz, and pages 133-198 to the narrative of Albrecht Herport van Bern. The latter visited the Cape in 1659 and 1688, but gives no information respecting the country.

*(SAINT-PIERRE, J. H. BERNARDIN DE): A Voyage to the Island of Mauritius (or Isle of France), the Isle of Bourbon, the Cape of Good Hope, &c. With Observations and Reflections upon Nature and Mankind. By a French Officer. . . . Translated from the French by John Parish. London: Printed for W. Griffin. . . . 291 pp. 8vo. 1775.

This work was written by the author of the well-known romance "Paul and Virginia," and is an account of the travels and voyages of Saint-Pierre from 1768 to 1771. In the latter part of 1771 the author visited Cape Town (on his homeward voyage), where he was entertained by "Monsieur Tolbac" (Governor Tulbagh), whom he describes as an able and affable man of eighty years of age. There is a somewhat pleasing account of the Cape Colony and its inhabitants, who are represented as being "a pensive set of people, who chuse rather to feel—than to converse or to argue. Perhaps the want of subject is the cause of their taciturnity." Reference is made to the paucity of the European population, and it is observed that "Holland perhaps . . . fears the aggrandising of this colony, preferable in every respect to the mother country."

(68 coloured engravings and letterpress.) Quarto. 1798.

Although this volume is complete in itself it forms one of a series. The work treats of the whole of Africa, but little space is devoted to the south of the continent. There is, however, a chapter of ten pages in the letterpress entitled "Hottentots, Namaquas, et Sauvages de la Terre de Natal," together with six engravings of Hottentots, Namaquas, and "Natal Savages."

A short life of this statesman, with a number of characteristic anecdotes and caricatures. It is stated that "during the South African negotiations which preceded Kruger's invasion of British territory, Lord Salisbury stood by Mr. Chamberlain. Throughout the conflict which followed he gave the Colonial Secretary his whole-hearted support."

The African section extends to 137 pages, of which pp. 9-37 are devoted to an account of the Cape, mainly based on the works of Kolben, Tachard, and Bovingh. The compiler animadverts severely on the cruelty of the Dutch, remarking, "Surely every one may thank God he does not live under the tyranny of the Dutch republick. . . . Witness the usage the English themselves met from the Dutch at Amboyna. This is the happy government, that our Whigs so much admire, and what they have made such strenuous efforts to introduce in Great Britain!"

*SALTER-WHITER, JAMES: A Trip to South Africa. By James Salter-Whiter, F.R.H.S. Sutton, Surrey: William Pile. . . . 247 pp. Cr. 8vo. 1892.

An account of a tour through the Cape Colony, the Free State, and Natal, 1891-2. The remarks on the Diamond Fields are full of inaccuracies, amongst which is the description of Mr. Rhodes as an Irishman. The author states that he was informed by Mr. Van Alphen, then Postmaster-General of the Transvaal, "that Mr. Gladstone's speech in opposition encouraged the Boers in the rebellion against Great Britain" (1880-1), and that "had it not been for Mr. Gladstone's encouragement of their desire for independence . . . the Transvaal would have remained British territory for all time"; "of course," said Mr. Van Alphen, "we rejoice to think we had Mr. Gladstone to deal with, for his mismanagement of the whole question was our salvation." Mr. Salter-Whiter was evidently favourably impressed by Mr. Hofmeyr, whom he styles "the creator and leader of the 'Afrikander Bund,'" and he remarks that, thanks to that statesman, "there is now no longer a 'Dutch Question' in Cape Colony; . . . all are now Afrikanders in a new and broader sense."

(Privately Printed.) 70 pp. Cr. 8vo. 1897.

The author was in Johannesburg at the time of the Jameson Raid, and remarks, "When we in Johannesburg, at the command of Sir Hercules Robinson," surrendered our arms, "we did so, fully believing in the promises made by him in the Queen's Name, through the British Resident, that . . . Jameson's life would be spared and the British Government would take up our cause, and see all just demands should be conceded to us, and that every person in Johannesburg would be protected from any punishment for what had been done. † Samarow, Gregor : Transvaal - Roman uit het hedendaagsche leven in Zuid-Afrika 2 dln. Wp. 188 + 267 . . . Dordrecht (c. 1896)

The future Attorney-General of the Cape Colony (Dr. Jameson's Ministry) showed in this essay that even as a youth he had given considerable thought to the problems of native policy in South Africa. Mr. Sampson asserts that "the vast hordes of South Africa must be a source of either strength or weakness to her . . . if they grow worse than they were . . . then it would have been better had they been exterminated at once. They must either become faithful workers, or they must degenerate into a miserable and disastrous cumber; and it lies in the power of the white which it shall be."

The dedication, which is dated from Somerset Road, Cape Town, June 20, 1844, reads as follows: "To Eliza, William Layton, and Frederic Sammons this odd volume of African 'Sayings and Doings' (to divert melancholy moments during their absence), is most affectionately inscribed by their old friend with the old face, Sam Sly." The opening article refers to the fact that by the Cape Law two "sponsors" were required, as sureties for the good behaviour of the new journal, and that these sureties were not obtained without considerable difficulty. In another column, under "Explanatory Address," the editor affords some particulars with respect to the demise of The Cape Town Spectator. Amongst other interesting items are accounts of the Heerengracht, Adderley St., &c. &c., at this period.

This volume is dedicated to Sir William Porter by William Layton Sammons, who is elsewhere described as the Editor, Publisher, and

A pamphlet on the Native Question in Natal. The author remarks that the Poll Tax Bill is "one of the finest and most righteous pieces of legislation that has been passed for years in Natal," and he asserts that "Polygamy should be hurried to its grave by a law that all natives who have not married shall be permitted to marry only one wife and straightway come under the ordinary Colonial law." It is observed that although "it would not be conducive to the good of the Europeans, or the natives, to give an indiscriminate vote to the latter . . . a vote of some nature must be given, and the sooner the better."

The author, who was in search of health, started from Pietermaritzburg, and enjoyed some good shooting en route; amongst other places visited were Spitzkop and Lydenburg, and there is an excellent description of these goldfields at this period, together with notes on the Boers and the natives. Some particulars are afforded respecting the campaign with Sekukuni, and there is a reproduction of a Royal Proclamation calling for Volunteers, which shows the extraordinary methods adopted by the Government in order to induce the inhabitants to enlist.

At the time of the writer's visit to the Transvaal, the British Commissioners, Messrs. Hogg and Mostyn Owen, were engaged in arranging the terms of the Sand River Convention with the Transvaal Trek Boers. While at Potchefstroom (January 12, 1852), Mr. Sanderson met "a large number of Boers . . . on their way to Sand River to attend the meeting . . . on the 16th. . . . They talked very largely about demanding not merely the Sovereignty, but Natal," &c. After the conference the writer met Pretorius, the Boer President, who had received "a triumphal reception," and who "professed his anxiety to live on good terms with the English Government." The paper affords some information respecting the Republics and their inhabitants at this period, and there is a sketch map of the Transvaal and the Orange Free State.

Universal Boer domination would indeed be a curse and not a blessing to South Africa."

London: Saunders, Otley & Co. . . . (3 Vols.) Roy. 8vo. 1861-3.

The Preface to the English edition is dated Trieste, 18th of March 1861, and refers to the "Physical and geognostic suggestions by Alexander von Humboldt," which were specially written by him (April 7, 1857) for the guidance of the Expedition. These suggestions, which are included in the first volume, could not, however, be carried out in their entirety, owing to the peculiar mission of the Novara, and its numerous and widely different objects. The proposal to fit out an Austrian man-of-war for the purpose of carrying out a voyage round the world was approved by the Emperor of Austria in 1856, and great interest was shown in the projected expedition and its objects by a large number of English, American, and German savants. The frigate was fitted out in the arsenal at Pola, and sailed from Trieste on April 30, 1857. Madeira was reached on June 8th, and here the ship remained for nine days, an interesting description being given of the island and of the town of Funchal. The voyage was then continued to South America, and thence to South Africa, the ship arriving in sight of Table Bay on September 26th. A furious gale springing up, they had to make for the open sea again, and eventually they did not cast anchor in Simon's Bay till October 2nd. The description of Cape Town and its environs extends to seventy pages, and affords valuable information as to this period. The author remarks, "The English element, which, with the stereotyped customs of its life, and its equitable laws . . . has almost entirely superseded the Dutch. . . . There is scarcely anything remaining to indicate that Cape Town was founded by the Dutch." The population of the Cape Colony is put down at 280,000, "of which 30,000 live in Cape Town." Sir George Grey is spoken of in very high terms as an able statesman and a sound scholar, and the writer bestows praise on the Observatory, the Museum, and the Botanical Gardens of Cape Town. There are some interesting notes on the Kaffir prisoners, five of whom were engaged (with their own consent) as apprentices on the ship. Part of the time spent ashore was devoted to what is described as "an excursion into the interior," which included visits to the Paarl, Stellenbosch, Paine's (probably Baines') Kloof, Brand Vley, Caledon, and Genadendal, and there are interesting accounts of all these places, embellished with a number of views. There are also notes on a "Remarkable Epidemic among Horses," the "Ravages of the Tsetse-fly," "Statistics of the Wool Trade," &c. &c. The voyage was resumed on August 26th, the Novara completing her voyage round the world on August 26th of the following year, when she arrived safely back at Trieste. There are several appendices, an index, and a large number of engravings, together with a chart of the route.

Short Journal of the Voyage to Surat and Jasques in the Gulf of Persia, taken in the year 1620, under the command of Andrew Schillinge, with four stout ships. As also the expedition of Richard Jobson to the River Gambia, undertaken with two ships, of which the first was named The Sion, of 200 tons burthen, and the second The St. John, of 50 tons burthen. In the year 1620. Both written by the travellers in English, and now for the first time translated out of that tongue. With a useful index.

Schilling sailed from Tilbury Hope on the 26th day of February 1620, his squadron containing four ships, The London, under the command of William Raffin, The Hart, under Richard Blythe, The Roebuck, under Richard Swan, and The Adelaar, under Captain Christopher Brown. On the 24th of June they dropped anchor in Saldanha Bay, Cape of Good Hope, where they found one English vessel, and nine Dutch ships under General van Bakkum. On July 3rd, possession of the place was taken in the name of King James I. of England, and, according to Theal, "the colours were hoisted for the purpose of being saluted, on the hill now called the Lion's Rump, but which they named King James's Mount." They sailed from the Cape on the 2nd of July, leaving no one in possession, and no English settlement took place. Mr. Theal says that the original pamphlet recording the voyage was published in English, but that he had not seen a copy of it. Barrow's work, to which he refers, states that the particulars of the formal act of taking possession of the Cape by Humphrey Fitzherbert and Andrew Schillinge "are entered at full length on the records of the East India Company," and the act of proclamation is inserted in the first volume of the first edition of "Travels into the Interior of Southern Africa, 4to, 1801." 145

There is also an "Extract" giving full particulars of the event, in which it is stated that the proclamation was published with great solemnity before the English and Dutch, "who seemed likewise much to approve the same."

The order appointing a Special Committee to inquire into the proposal to establish a School of Mines partially supported by the Government, was granted on July 19, 1894. The report advocates the establishment of the school with a Government grant of £700 a year out of an annual (estimated) expenditure of about £1650. The only witnesses called by the committee were Dr. Muir, Superintendent-General of Education for the Cape Colony, and Professor Hahn, Ph.D., M.A. Dr. Muir emphasised the necessity for the establishment of the school, alleging that students from South African Colleges had at present to take their mining diplomas in Europe. Dr. Hahn said that the students would be enabled to study mining practically and theoretically in all its branches at the De Beers Mines, the directors having promised to do all in their power to make the school a success. He recommended that there should be (1) A Theoretical Preliminary Course at the South African College, Cape Town. (2) The First Practical Course at Kimberley. (3) The Second Practical Course at Johannesburg. The School of Mines was opened soon after at Kimberley.

*——: New Edition completing ninety-third thousand. (In one volume.) xiv + 346 pp. London: Hutchinson & Co. Cr. 8vo. 1883.

The tale centres round an ordinary Boer farm, and depicts the hard, coarse, unlovely life of some of the Afrikaner peasant farmers, relieved from time to time by characteristic descriptions of the peculiar fascination of the Veld. Possibly some trace of the earlier life of the author may be delineated in the character of "Lyndall," who is represented as having been brought on a farm and partially educated, and whose discontent at the limitations of her sex afford an interesting study of what were possibly the views of the writer of the novel. It may be remarked that "Lyndall" is a family name of the Schreiners, and Olive Schreiner and her sisters and brothers were the children of a missionary to the Griquas, and probably witnessed in their youth some of the scenes depicted in the story. The opinions of the author upon the inequality of the sexes, and the degradation to women involved by marriage without love, are expressed in an extremely vigorous manner, but the work is certainly the most notable volume of fiction relating to South Africa undertaken up to this period by any writer of South African birth and education.

- *SCHREINER, OLIVE : An English-South African's View of the Situation. Words in Season. London : Hodder & Stoughton. . . . 96 pp. Cr. 8vo. (1899.)

The author observes, "Our Dutch fellow South Africans are a strange folk. Virile, resolute, passionate with a passion hid far below the surface, they are at once the gentlest and the most determined of peoples. . . . Under the roughest exterior of the up-country Boer lies a nature strangely sensitive and conscious of a personal dignity—a people who never forgets a kindness and does not easily forget a wrong." The pamphlet is intensely sympathetic in tone to the Government and people of the Transvaal, and deeply deprecates the possibility of a war in South Africa, the author remarking, "There are men who do not know they love a Dutchman, but the first three hundred that fall, they will know it. . . . There are hundreds of us, men and women who have loved England; we would have given our lives for her; but rather than strike one South African man fighting for freedom, we would take this right hand and hold it in the fire till nothing was left of it but a charred and blackened bone." President Paul Kruger is appealed to in the following words: "Great old man, first but not last of South Africa's great line of rulers, you have shown us you could fight for freedom; show us you can win peace," while the Dutch South Africans are exhorted to "Be strong, be fearless, be patient. . . . wait a little, all will come right."

The writer appeals earnestly against the coming struggle, observing, "The greatest empire upon earth. . . . with its five hundred million subjects, may rise up in its full majesty of power and glory and crush thirty thousand farmers. It may not be a victory, but it will be a slaughter." She asserts that even if the civil war resulted in the death of all the fighting African born men, the women would be left, and she remarks, "If there were left but five thousand pregnant South African born women. . . . these women would breed up again a race like to the first. . . . There would be silence but no peace."

An address read to a public meeting of the Cape Town branch of the "Jewish Territorial Organisation," on July 1, 1906, called for the purpose of recording the "profound abhorrence" of the gathering "at the continuous and unchecked outrages on the Jews in Russia. . . ." The address expresses deep sympathy with the objects of the meeting. In a Preface contributed to the pamphlet by the Rev. A. P. Bender, M.A., of Cape Town, it is observed that "this message from the heart of one who holds an honoured place in the golden treasury of English Literature . . . may be said to represent a true Christian answer to what is popularly known as the Jewish Question."

The "Publisher's Note" states that the letter "was written by Mrs. Cronwright Schreiner . . . in October 1908, in reply to twelve questions submitted to her by the editor of the Transvaal Leader, and it appeared in that journal on December 22nd." The writer deprecates undue haste "to see unification accomplished instantly," and points out that a similar attempt in South Africa many years previously "met with disaster."

A paper read by C. S. Cronwright-Schreiner in the Town Hall, Kimberley, on August 29, 1895. The authors maintain that the political situation at the time showed that "steady and persistent retrogressive movement" existed, and they discuss the means of retarding further backward legislation. They place the Bond as first among the "retrogressive factors," but it is stated of that body that "in no way is it a merely racial organisation," and its evil influence is due to a "small band of monopolists" who, "taking advantage of that childlike simplicity which is at once the weakness and the greatest charm of the Boer . . . lead him whither he would and also whither he would not." Mr. Rhodes and "his monopolists" are charged with deliberately favouring retrogressive measures (amongst which the Glen Grey Act is mentioned) in order to get the support of the Bond party, while it is asserted that the monopolists justified their attitude by stating, "Rhodes . . . will within our lifetime so manipulate that the neighbouring Republics shall fall into our hands," and the writers ask, "Is the forced annexation of the neighbouring states worth the price we are paying for it?" They considered that a "Progressive Party" should be formed to fight the monopolists and retrogressive elements under the leadership of a kind of "progressive Mr. Hofmeyr." It is affirmed that about ten or a dozen men in Parliament at that time followed the views of the authors, and that with proper organisation and support from the press, the party would be a power in the land in five years.

A number of letters written by Mr. Schreiner, and published in the Cape Times, between August 3, 1899, and March 1, 1900. By far the most important of these letters is the one published on November 6, 1900, in which Mr. Schreiner openly accuses Mr. Reitz, then State Secretary of the Transvaal, of deliberately considering measures for the overthrow of British Power in South Africa as long back as 1880-1881. He relates the conversation which took place between them, which was brought about by Reitz endeavouring to persuade him (but ineffectually) to join the Afrikaner Bond. Mr. Schreiner states, in a subsequent letter, that he has been accused "by some of Mr. Reitz' party that in making public what I did about his views, I was revealing matters which had been confided to me as a friend," but he maintains that there was nothing confidential whatever in the intercourse, and that Mr. Reitz made no attempt to hide his views. He remarks that his present action "has severed the friendly relations which existed between me and Mr. Reitz, and much dearer ones too . . . I have only done my duty to my country and to truth."

It is pointed out that many people are under the impression that there are only two classes of the population in South Africa, the whites (including the Dutch and English) and the blacks; but it is often overlooked that there is a third class, i.e. the civilised coloured people, who are tolerably educated, and who are on the whole "a steady, industrious, and respectable peasantry and artisan class."

With regard to the political rights of the coloured races in South Africa, it is asserted that "both political parties in the Cape Colony are agreed that the determining factors in the drawing of the enfranchising line shall be the degree of civilisation, i.e. of material, mental, moral, and social advancement attained."

*SCHREINER, THEOPHILUS LYNDALL: Mr. Theo. Schreiner's Report. Reprinted from "Cape Times," Nov. 13th, 1901. (Cape Town.) 9 pp. 16mo. 1901.

Mr. Schreiner deprecated any concession to Dutch or Boer sentiment after the rejection "of the lenient and generous terms of peace offered by the British Government . . . the repeated invasions of the Cape Colony, the brigandage and acts of murderous violence which have been perpetrated," &c. &c. He gave details of the work of the Vigilance Committee in England, undertaken by Mrs. Stuart, Mr. Wilmot, and himself, and remarked on the great change in the attitude of the Daily News since its change of proprietorship, since when, it is remarked, "it has been the most virulent of pro-Boer organs." Mr. J. A. Hobson is charged with spreading "colossal falsehoods" with regard to the native question in South Africa, but the speaker observed, "The British nation, as a whole, is by this time most well informed as to the cause of the war, and has no doubt of its being a just one." It was stated that "the pro-Boers form a small and ever-diminishing proportion of the population of Great Britain," and that "in the tremendous struggle that has taken place in South Africa through the mad ambitions of the South African Republic, the Orange Free State, and their allies, loyal people are virtually the victors."

The main points combated in this pamphlet are the attacks made by Mr. Cronwright Schreiner upon the treatment of the natives by the De Beers Company, the mining capitalists, Mr. Rhodes, and others. It is stated that when Mr. Cronwright-Schreiner "came to reside in Kimberley, only six years ago, he had already commenced, for reasons best known to himself, that vendetta against Mr. Rhodes which he has carried on with such pertinacity ever since."

- *SCHREINER, THEOPHILUS LYNDALL: The Afrikaner Bond and other Causes of the War. . . . Issued by the Imperial South African Association. . . . Published by Spottiswoode & Co., Ltd. . . . London. 52 pp. Cr. 8vo. 1901.

Mr. Schreiner states that he was born at Colesberg, his father having been a German by birth, and his mother an Englishwoman whose maiden name was Lyndall. He expresses a love for the "Taal" and for the Dutch Reformed Church, but denounces the evil done by the ministers of that religion by yielding to the political dream of overthrowing the supremacy of England and substituting Dutch domination. He expresses the opinion that the war sprang from "different Political Ideals," "the Native Question," "England's weak and vacillating Policy," the "Retrocession of the Transvaal," the "Afrikaner Daydream," and the "Influence of the Afrikaner Bond," and he remarks on the teaching of "Afrikanerdom" in the schools and colleges of South Africa. He maintains that where the Dutch character is weak the English is strong, and vice versa, and therefore we might expect the happiest results from the "union of the two races." Mr. Schreiner vigorously impeaches the Bond, which, he says, "like some huge vampire has been for nearly twenty years sucking out the life-blood of true political and national life in South Africa, and overshadowing the land with its dark and baleful wings, under which the growths of race hatred and everything foul and poisonous have sprung to hideous life and flourished."

- *SCHREINER, THEOPHILUS LYNDALL: Government Liquor Monopoly in Russia and the Transvaal. (Cape Town.) 88 pp. Cr. 8vo. 1901.

A criticism of the scheme to adopt the Russian System of Government Liquor Monopoly in the Transvaal. Mr. Schreiner argues that the Russian System has failed in bringing about an advance in temperance, and that it is immoral "for a Government to identify itself with a traffic that is hurtful to the community, in order to minimise the amount of harm done." As an alternative scheme he proposes a drastic Licensing Act which would entirely prohibit the sale of liquor to natives, limit licences in ratio to the adult population, and provide that such licences be only granted to bona fide hotels, restaurants, and clubs.

*SCHREINER, THEOPHILUS LYNDALL: "The Causes of the War in South Africa." An address delivered at the Junior Constitutional Club, Piccadilly (London), by Mr. Theophilus Lyndall Schreiner, on Thursday, February 7th, 1901. Mr. H. Crouch Batchelor in the Chair. London: Printed by M'Corquodale and Company, Limited. . . . 31 pp. 8vo. 1901.

In the course of his address the speaker alluded to the fact that the loyalists of South Africa had little reason to love any of the Governments, or even any of the Ministers, of Great Britain, until the advent of Mr. Chamberlain to the Colonial Office, and he asserted that the country did not support Sir Bartle Frere, the first statesman who really grasped the South African situation. He urged that after the end of the war there must be an interregnum of Crown Colony Government in the new colonies, and deprecated the granting of any representative institutions to them until a later period. He maintained that the war was a just one on the part of Britain, and an unjust one on the Boers' part. He said that the Ultimatum, which he characterised as outrageous, had been prepared some time before it was issued, and that the war would have begun earlier if the Republicans had been ready. In his opinion the Transvaal had come to the decision that the time had arrived for a tremendous wrestle with Great Britain for South Africa, in which they were to be assisted by the Republican Party all over South Africa, and all the negotiations and conferences re the franchise were only entered into in order to gain time. He pointed out that as long ago as 1884 the deputation to Lord Derby asserted in Holland "that they hoped the South African Flag would wave from Table Bay to the Zambesi, and if that end had to be accomplished by blood instead of ink they would not lack the men to do it." Mr. Schreiner considered the Jameson Raid unjustifiable from every point of view, but he says that it did not cause the war, neither did the capitalists, who, in his opinion, had little to gain except the general advantages of honest and capable Government. President Kruger, it is maintained, refused all rights to Uitlanders, simply to conserve Dutch independence and his own system of Dutch oligarchy. He never cared for mere republican independence, fearing the chances of an English Republic instead of his Boer Government. Much censure is bestowed on the ministers of the Dutch Reformed Church, particularly those in the Cape Colony: they are charged with fostering the idea of ousting Great Britain from South Africa, and it is said that if they had done their duty within the last twenty years, and had not spread universal disloyalty, there would have been no war. The services of Sir Alfred Milner in recognising the danger to the Empire were referred to, and it is remarked that the schemes of the Afrikanders were at last unveiled, and the Home Government informed of the rapid spread of disaffection with the object of forming an African Republic throughout the whole of South Africa.

Schreiner (Mrs. Stakesby Lewis) and addenda by Mr. Theophilus L. Schreiner. The Ideal Publishing Union, Ltd. . . . London, E.C. 56 pp. 12mo. 1901.

(With inscription on cover, "With Mr. Theo. L. Schreiner's Compliments.")

In the Introduction it is stated that, owing to the establishment of the Compound System by the De Beers Company, many of the evils of the drink traffic have been eliminated in Kimberley, and the writer honours the Company and its master spirit, Cecil John Rhodes, for carrying out this step. There are articles on the state of Liquor Legislation in Natal, the Cape Colony, Rhodesia, the Orange Free State, the Transvaal, and Basutoland. With reference to the Transvaal, it is alleged that the Government only very half-heartedly attempted to enforce the law, and while Joubert, Leyds, and Reitz were honestly in favour of the restriction and prohibition of the sale of liquor to natives, they were powerless against Kruger, backed up by the wealthy and influential Liquor Traffic. Mr. Schreiner opposes the movement in favour of the new Government of the Transvaal becoming the liquor sellers of the country, as proposed by the Rev. Mr. Darragh and others.

Mr. Schreiner stated that it was "the duty of every hon. member, . . . no matter what side he may sit on, and of every person or agency of influence in the country, to strain for one great object, and that is . . . to save our colony as much as possible from being involved in the vortex of war into which it is now apparently a certainty that South Africa has been drawn."

This early Zulu grammar was written by a well-known missionary, who settled in Zululand about the middle of the nineteenth century. The author established the "Norwegian Mission" in Natal about the year 1845, and at first resided at Umlazi. Being refused permission to visit Zululand by King Panda, Schreuder (often referred to as Schröder) went to China, but returned to Natal in 1849. In 1850 he founded a station at Mapumulo, where he set up a printing press, and he also established a mission at Echowe in Zululand. Baldwin ("African Hunting and Adventure," 1863) speaks in the highest terms of Mr. Schreuder, and remarks that he was "thoroughly acquainted with the language, manners, and customs of the (Zulu) nation . . . the Zulus respect and look up to him, and would on no account injure him."

(Edited by Leo Weinthal.) Pretoria: "The Press" Printing and Publishing Works. Pp. 56 and (about) 190 sketches and portraits. Roy. 8vo. 1894.

This interesting volume owes its existence to the exertions of a number of admirers of the deceased artist's work, the committee formed to carry out the publication consisting mostly of the prominent public men in South Africa at the close of the nineteenth century. Schröder was probably the best caricaturist that the sub-continent had possessed up to this period, and his work is characterised by the fidelity of most of his portraits, and the humour exhibited in his cartoons. A fine study of Kruger is one of the gems of the collection, which includes portraits of most of the celebrities of South Africa circa 1869-1892. Among the interesting items of the publication are the facsimiles of letters from President Kruger, Sir Henry (afterwards Lord) Loch, President Reitz, C. J. Rhodes, Dr. Leyds, and many others referring to the issue of the memento. A memoir of Mr. Schröder was contributed by Mr. Charles Cowen, and there are two portraits of the artist.

With inscription: "J. M. Donald, Esq., with compliments from the author, London, October 1899."

In March 1884 the authors undertook an expedition at their own expense, into the interior of South Central Africa, "with the object of completing the survey of the Chobe river to its sources and generally investigating this unknown part of Central South Africa." The travellers were well qualified for their task, and they claim to have been the first whites "to traverse this partly unknown country." Messrs. Schulz and Hammar started their expedition from Dundee, Natal, and crossing the Drakensberg, journeyed through the Transvaal and Bechuanaland to Matabeleland, visiting the Victoria Falls and then following the course of the Zambesi River to its conflux with the Chobe (or Linyanti River) and showing the connection of the latter with the Okovanga River. The volume gives an excellent account of the countries traversed, especially North-West Rhodesia, where the River Chobe forms the boundary between the territories of the Chartered Company and the wedge of land belonging to German South-West Africa which intrudes into the centre of this part of the continent. There are many valuable notes respecting the natives, the fauna, and the sport of the country, and some particulars respecting the position and policy of the native chiefs in this part of South Africa at this period.

This magnificent work was originally conceived by the late Sir Victor Brooke, "under whose supervision the greater number of the plates and other illustrations were prepared." Sir Victor died in 1891, "when still in the prime of life . . . leaving his great work still unfinished, and represented mainly by a series of over a hundred lithographic plates, which . . . have formed the basis of the present work. The MSS. . . . were also kindly placed at my disposal by the family," but an entirely new work had to be written by Mr. Sclater and Mr. Thomas, the latter contributing "the synonymy and scientific descriptions," and the former "the ordinary letterpress."

The author states that he has chosen as the limit of the sub-continent the Rivers Cunene and Zambesi on the West and East coasts respectively, remarking, "on the whole, this is a more convenient line than the Tropic of Capricorn." The volumes are prefaced by an important bibliography of works dealing with the mammals described in the text, and the information afforded is of the most ample character, including the classical, popular, and vernacular names of the specimens, references to works on Zoology and the mammals, and a general description of the animals, including notes on their size, distribution, history, and habits.

Mr. Sclater remarks, "It has always been a source of wonder to me that so little knowledge or interest seems to exist among the people of this country in natural history." The author refers to the general ignorance prevailing with regard to the natural history subjects of South Africa, and expresses the opinion that if "some sort of natural study were introduced into South African schools, there would be trained up a certain number of men and women who would not only become lovers of nature and natural things, but would be able and willing . . . to further our scanty knowledge of the living creatures around us."

By John Scoble, "Times" Correspondent in Pretoria prior to the present war, and H. R. Abercrombie, of the Intelligence Department, Cape Colony. Popular edition. London: William Heinemann. viii + 311 pp. Cr. 8vo. 1900.

After briefly touching on the early history of the Transvaal, a full account of the Boer Republics is given, especially from the time of the first annexation in 1877. The authors assert that the aims of Kruger and the policy of the Afrikaner Bond eventually transformed the President of an insignificant republic into practically the despot of a wealthy and military oligarchy, whose chief aim was the establishment of an Afrikaner Republic over the whole of South Africa. The events which led to the war, and Kruger's methods for maintaining his ascendancy, are closely followed, and the volume ends with an account of his defeat and flight.

In 1894, Mr. Scott accompanied Captain J. Aspinall Turner on an expedition to South Africa, in the course of which he visited Barotseland, and after some stay in Rhodesia, returned to England in 1895; an account of his adventures and experiences will be found in the series of letters dated from June 3, 1894, to January 14, 1895. On the outbreak of the South African War (1899-1902) he accepted an offer from the Manchester Courier to act as an accredited war correspondent for them, and sailed for Africa in October 1899. He joined Lord Roberts' army and witnessed the surrender of Cronje, and from this time forward was constantly in the field; he was wounded at Abraham's Kraal, but soon recovered and went through the entire campaign, having decided not to leave the country till the war was ended. He was present at the declaration of peace at Pretoria, and intended to leave for England on July 27, 1902, but he was unfortunately killed by an accident on the railway siding at Rietfontein on the preceding day.

The author of this little sketch was a well-known manager of operatic and theatrical companies in South Africa in the eighties, and he dedicates the volume to his "numerous friends and more numerous enemies at present scattered about South Africa." The work describes a journey taken by the author and some friends, together with the celebrated "Ikey Sonnenberg," who is represented under the title of "Ikey Schlenterpollok," who had engaged to show the party a mythical "coal farm" he had sold them. "Ikey's" well-known yarns, which were at one time celebrated from Cape Town to the Zambesi, are all hashed up in this production, but it was rather unjust on the part of Mr. Searelle to invest this South African humourist with a cockney accent, as he almost invariably spoke with a kind of unique Hebraic Americanism peculiar to the man.

An account of a "Journey North of the Zambesi, through the Manica Country," and of "The River Chobe"; the communications, which are accompanied by a map of the "Central Zambesi Region," were addressed "from Klerksdorp in the Transvaal," the first bearing the date February 4, and the second March 20, 1880, and they describe Mr. Selous' travels in this part of Africa in the years 1877, 1878, and 1879.

A letter from Mr. Selous, addressed from Zeerust, Marico, Transvaal, January 5, 1888, giving details of a journey through Matabele and Mashonaland, in which he was accompanied by Messrs. J. A. Jameson, A. C. Fountaine, and F. Cooper. Mr. Selous writes, "We have travelled over a large tract of country, based upon Mr. Baines's observations, and including my previous journeys in Matabeleland. - *SELOUS, FREDERICK COURTENAY: Mashunaland and the Mashunas. Ex. "The Fortnightly Review," vol. 45, New Series, pp. 661-676. Roy. 8vo. 1889.

The author states that he wrote this article "in the hope that it may call some attention to the condition of the Mashunas," a people amongst whom I have travelled extensively, and of whom I have very kindly recollections. He asserts that it is "altogether a mistake" to believe that "the Mashunas are a people conquered by the Matabele and now living peacefully under their protection . . . there are numerous tribes of Mashunas who are in no wise subject to Lobengula." He gives a glowing description of the country, calling it "a land of perennial streams where thirst is an unknown quantity . . . the fairest and perhaps also the richest country in all South Africa." Mr. Selous had hunted in "Mashunaland" at different times from 1878-1887, and he gives some interesting sporting experiences with lions, &c. He maintains that he never had any trouble with the natives, and says, "Personally I like them better than any other African tribe with which I have come into contact. They seem to have little of the ferocity which usually forms so marked a feature in the character of uncivilised races." He was of opinion that they should be carefully protected, "for they are the people who will supply the native labour that will be so necessary in the future development of Mashunaland," and he remarks that the resettlement of the country by Europeans would be welcomed as the greatest of blessings by the natives.

A letter sent by Mr. Selous in explanation of the sketch survey forwarded by him to the Geographical Society of a portion of Mashonaland traversed by him in 1889, and from which the accompanying map is drawn. Mr. Selous states, "I have named two conspicuous hills, Mounts Darwin and Thackeray. I have done this because the Portuguese claim the country, which they know nothing about (as their maps prove), and where the natives say no Portuguese has ever travelled. We claim the country too under the Queen's charter, and we mean to have it. . . . Such names on the map, at any rate, will show that Englishmen have been there."

Mr. Selous states that in his opinion "the ancient builders of Zimbabwe were not first destroyed and then supplanted by an inferior race, but they became gradually fused with a lower race, which bears traces of its admixture with the more intelligent people." With regard to the gold mines, it is asserted that "the Portuguese records abundantly prove that the gold-mining went on without interruption till early in the present century, and the old men among the Matabele who took part in the first raids made amongst the Mashonas by Umziligazi's (Moselekatse's) warriors, state positively that they found the Amacholi working for gold. . . ." It is mentioned that in 1891 a bucket and rope made of bark were found in a shaft, and having been constructed of so perishable a material, they could not have been of any great antiquity.

The speaker narrated some of his adventures in Mashonaland during his long residence in the country. In the course of the discussion which followed the paper, Mr. H. M. Stanley referred to the indiscriminate slaughter of lions, elephants, hippopotami, and other large game in South Africa, and his remarks appear to have been somewhat resented by Mr. Selous, who observed, "I went out to South Africa much more a naturalist than a sportsman. I was a poor man and had to make my own living. . . . I found the only way I could make a living was by elephant-hunting. . . . I have not shot animals for sport. I had to shoot the elephants for the sake of the ivory, and I had to shoot a certain number of antelopes in order to supply my followers with food."

- *SELOUS, FREDERICK COURTENEY : A Hunter's Wanderings in Africa. Being a narrative of nine years spent amongst the game of the far interior of South Africa. Containing accounts of explorations beyond the Zambesi, on the River Chobe, and in the Matabele and Mashuna Countries, with full notes upon the natural history and present distribution of all the large mammalia. By Frederick Courteney Selous. Third edition, with nineteen full-page illustrations by J. Smit, E. Whymper, and Miss A. B. Selous. London: Richard Bentley & Son. . . . xvii + 455 pp. 8vo. 1893.

It is observed in the Preface that since the issue of "Baldwin's book upon African hunting . . . now nearly twenty years ago, no work has been published which can be considered in any way as a guide for men about to visit the interior of South Africa in search of sport." This volume claims to supply the want of such a publication, and gives particulars respecting the travels and adventures of the author from 1871 to 1880 in Bechuanaland, Mashonaland, Matabeleland, and the Transvaal, during which period Mr. Selous "led the life of a professional elephant-hunter." The work contains a large amount of information respecting the fauna of the sub-continent, with many details for the benefit of sportsmen shooting in the regions traversed by the author.

- *SELOUS, FREDERICK COURTENAY: Travel and Adventure in South-East Africa. Being the narrative of the last eleven years spent by the author on the Zambesi and its tributaries; with an account of the colonisation of Mashonaland and the progress of the gold industry in that country. By Frederick Courteney Selous, C.M.Z.S., Gold Medallist of the Royal Geographical Society. . . . With numerous illustrations and map. London: Rowland Ward & Co., Limited. . . . xviii + 477 pp. Roy. 8vo. 1893.

After a short visit to England in 1881, Selous returned to South Africa in order to make collections of specimens of some South African fauna for the "British Museum" and the "South African Museum," &c. He was thus engaged from 1882 to 1887, and the first nine chapters of this volume are devoted to a narrative of his experiences with the Boers and the natives while engaged in his hunting expeditions, together with some account of the native wars and the raids of the Matabeles. Other chapters give particulars of journeys amongst the Mashikolumbwe and Barotsi people, the pioneer expeditions of the British South Africa Company, and the condition of Mashonaland, with notes on its previous history, the gold-mining industry in Rhodesia at this period, and reminiscences of hunting and adventure extending over a lengthy period. There are many interesting passages referring to the author's intercourse with Mr. Frank Mandy, C. J. Rhodes, Dr. Jameson, Sam Edwards, Montague Kerr, Lobengula, Khama, and many other celebrated South African personages and pioneers, and an excellent account of the Chartered Company's expedition to Mashonaland, in which Mr. Selous took prominent part, together with some details respecting the disputes with the Portuguese officials.

Some details are given respecting exciting lion adventures in Mashonaland and Matabeleland.

*SELOUS, FREDERICK COURTENEY: The History of the Matabele, and the Cause and Effect of the Matabele War. In vol. xxv., "Proceedings of the Royal Colonial Institute," pp. 250-290. 8vo. 1894.

The subjects of King Lobengula are described as "a fierce and overbearing, cruel and bloodthirsty people who were . . . certain sooner or later to come into conflict with the advancing wave of European civilisation." The speaker asserted that "the occupation of Mashonaland may be looked upon as the first cause of the Matabele War," as the raids of the Matabeles on the Mashonas had to be restrained. Mr. Selous bitterly attacks Mr. Henry Labouchere, whom he accuses of unjust and unreasonable hostility towards the pioneers of the Chartered Company, who were stigmatised by him as "greedy adventurers, border ruffians, ruffraff, marauders, and murderers," and he states that the Radical member of Parliament was guilty of falsehood and perversion of the truth. It is asserted that the Matabele War would have a beneficent effect on the native races of Central South Africa and that "Nobody . . . less ignorant and prejudiced than the editor of Truth would commit himself to the statement that Makalakas and Mashunas, or any other subject tribe living under the government of the Matabele, were better off under that severe and capricious rule than they will be under the administration of Dr. Jameson and the magistrates appointed by the British South Africa Company."

Mr. Selous remarks of the campaign that it was "one of the boldest enterprises ever undertaken by our adventurous race . . . it has regained for Englishmen the prestige that was lost amongst both whites and blacks when Sir Evelyn Wood was ordered to make peace with the Boers after the defeat at Majuba Hill . . . and reduced to a certainty the eventual supremacy of the British race as the dominant people in South Africa."

*(SELOUS, FREDERICK COURTENEY): Notes on Mr. Selous's Map of Mashonaland and Manika. By E. G. Ravenstein. Ex. "Proceedings of the Royal Geographical Society," vol. xvii., No. 1, pp. 46-49. (New Monthly Series.) Roy. 8vo. 1895.

It is stated that "the map is intended . . . to illustrate the work done by Mr. Selous whilst in the service of the South Africa Company, and . . . to embody, as far as possible, the knowledge we possess of the entire region extending from Fort Salisbury to the northward as far as the Zambesi, and to the eastward as far as the Lower Pungwe. . . . Since the completion of the . . . map, information has been received from Mr. Declé, Mr. Coryndon, and Mr. Swan which could not be utilised." The manuscript maps compiled by Mr. Selous "have been deposited in the map-room of the Royal Geographical Society"; they are six in number, and illustrate (1) the routes taken by Mr. Selous from September 1890 to September 1891; (2) Route of Manika Mission from Fort Charter to Umtasa's, &c.; (3) Route from Umtali to Mapanda; (4) Sketch of Mashonaland, showing tribal boundaries; (5) Rough Sketch Map of the countries ruled over by the Makorikori chiefs; (6) About thirty sheets of MS. maps, &c.

*SELOUS, FREDERICK COURTENEY: Sunshine and Storm in Rhodesia. Being a narrative of events in Matabeleland both before and during the recent native insurrection up to the date of the disbandment of the Bulawayo Field Force. . . . With map and illustrations. London: Rowland Ward & Co., Ltd. . . . xxvii + 290 pp. 8vo. 1896.

After the close of the Matabele War, Mr. Selous returned to England, but in 1895 was offered an appointment in Matabeleland, and proceeding to Rhodesia, took up the management of the Essexvale Estate in the neighbourhood of Bulawayo. He was busied in the organisation of the property till March 1896, when the rebellion of the natives broke out, and he assumed the command of the H troop of the Bulawayo Field Force, which he retained till the conclusion of hostilities. The author was of opinion that the removal of the police force from Matabeleland to the Transvaal (Jameson Raid), "gave the natives their opportunity to revolt," but he asserts that the leaders of the insurrection had long determined on rising whenever the circumstances were favourable to the movement. The causes of the discontent amongst the natives were, the exaction of "a certain amount of paid labour from every able-bodied man," the confiscation of cattle, and the endeavour on the part of the Matabeles to free themselves from the restraints of a settled form of government. In addition to a full account of the rebellion, there is a supplementary chapter recording some of the author's views on the Anglo-Boer question, in which he states that "a war between the Boers and British can only be a calamity of incalculable dimensions to both races."

*SELOUS, FREDERICK COURTENEY: Mr. F. Selous on the War. National Reform Union Pamphlets. The Transvaal Question. . . . Published by the National Reform Union . . . Manchester. 7 pp. 8vo. (1899.)

The two letters which form the contents of this pamphlet were published in the London Times on October 24, 1899, but the former was written in July, Mr. Selous observing that it was withheld from publication, "chiefly for the reason that I kept on hoping, and was led to believe in influential quarters, that a war in South Africa would be avoided at the eleventh hour." The writer criticises the statements made about this time by Mr. Rider Haggard, Sir Sidney Shippard, and Canon Knox Little with regard to the shortcomings of the Boers, and observes that he was in the Transvaal at the time of the retrocession of the country, and although these people hated the British Government, "I met with no insults nor the least incivility." The writer warns his readers that whatever might be the result of the struggle between the two races, "the greater part of 400,000 Dutch Afrikaners would survive the war," and although we might get the gold fields, the course we were pursuing "will infallibly lose us the whole of South Africa as a British possession within the lifetime of many men who are now living." With the second letter, Mr. Selous observes, "I believe in my inmost soul that it is not a just war, that it could have been avoided, that it can bring this country no honour, and it will be the cause of much future trouble."

- *——: Walks and Sketches at the Cape of Good Hope. . . . Second Edition, enlarged. 198 pp. 12mo. 1805.

The work contains an interesting account of Cape Town and its surroundings at this period, and much information is afforded with reference to the country and its inhabitants during the period of the first British occupation. It is remarked that "there is perhaps no set of people on the face of the globe whose character is more difficult to catch or describe than that of the inhabitants of the Cape. . . . They are neither English, nor French, nor Dutch. Nor do they form an original class as Africans, but a singular mixture of all together, which has not as yet acquired a consistence." Some details are afforded respecting the few public buildings then existing in Cape Town, together with a description of the Public Gardens and the Heere-Gracht, and it is mentioned that in laying the foundations of some houses in Church Square, "especially those near the Church, several tomb-stones with Portuguese inscriptions were dug up . . . which probably covered the remains of the first European settlers at this celebrated point of Africa." There is an account of the wreck of the Sceptre, which was taken, apparently, from the narrative of an eye-witness. In the course of a narrative of a trip to the "Reed Valley," near Salt River, the writer describes "a horrid spectacle. Upon the sand were erected a number of stakes and gibbets upon which were the remains of upwards of a dozen malefactors who had been executed at the Cape at different periods. Some were suspended by the feet, decapitated; others were laid across the narrow wheel on which they had been racked, bent double and hanging down each side, whilst many seemed to preserve, by the attitude in which they were placed, the last writhings of pain and approaching death."

The additional pages in the second edition present an interesting account of the country between Cape Town and Blettenberg's Bay, with many particulars respecting the white inhabitants. The author makes special mention of the hospitality shown him, but remarks, "Having mentioned this trait which is general and striking, I unwillingly confess myself at a loss to name any other virtue which particularly marks the Cape boors whom we have seen. They are sufficiently honest, peaceable, and sober, but they have no prominent virtues to characterise them. . . . Their vices are perhaps more characteristic. They are at times cruel, yet apparently more from a coldness and want of feeling than from a savage and ferocious thirst of blood. . . . The greater part of them are cowards when exposed to any danger to which they have not been inured from their infancy. . . . Against lions, buffaloes, and elephants they are fearless, because they are certain of their aim. . . . They mingle in a strange degree great credulity and a desire to be thought very cunning . . . and to make a good bargain is in the Dutch catechism the chief end of man."

In discussing the retrocession of the country to the Dutch, the author expresses his opinion on its value "should the Cape ever again fall into and remain in our possession," and he dilates upon "the importance of forming . . . a colony of Englishmen speaking our language, and bound to us by every tie, on this great angle of Africa."

Vol. I. xi + 303 pp.; Vol. II. vii + 322 pp. London: Published by Richard Bentley. 8vo. 1833.

In the second narrative there is a short description of the coast of the Cape of Good Hope, where the surveying expedition arrived in November 1825. There is also some account of the Column and Cross erected by Bartholomew Diaz at Angra Pequina Bay, about the beginning of the fifteenth century, the writer remarking, "This pillar is composed of solid marble, but much dilapidated by the boisterous winds and waves to which it is constantly exposed. It has the arms of Portugal (five Moors' Heads) at its summit, and had an inscription which time has now rendered quite illegible. To support our national character, even in that distant land, various specimens of Bartholomew Diaz's pillar were knocked off and brought on board, either for the satisfaction of the dilapidator or gratification of the curious."

The author was instrumental in establishing the "Mounted Sharpshooters Corps" which formed part of the Imperial Yeomanry Force during the South African War (1899-1902). Eventually no less than 1700 men were recruited by the Committee and sent to Africa, and the first battalion of Sharpshooters to be in the field landed at Beira on May 5, 1900. On reaching Umtali, a fortnight's rest put both horses and men into condition, and they marched to Marandallas, and thence to Victoria ; subsequently Sir F. Carrington, the General in command in Rhodesia, was ordered to Bulawayo, where his force was broken up, and his troops, including the Sharpshooters, were drafted into different regiments in South Africa, and from this time to the return of the men to England they were constantly on active service.

Pp. 380-429 contain a narrative entitled "Through Zululand by Ox Waggon," 1889, which also affords some description of the Cape Colony, and an account of a journey from Durban to Zululand. The author visited Chief John Dunn on two occasions, and describes the latter as "a middle-aged Scotchman, rather short of stature, and stoutly built ; his face and hands both tanned and freckled by the sun of Zululand. . . . All his wives have come to him willingly, and as the willing offerings of Zulu chiefs and men who have counted it an honour."

- *SETTRINGTON, Lady HILDA: Eleven Months of my Life. (Privately printed; no title-page nor printer's name, &c.) 46 pp. Cr. 8vo. 1903.

Lady Settrington evidently wrote this little sketch for the perusal of her most intimate friends, but the unique circumstances under which it was produced render it of especial interest as a curious little memento of the South African War (1899-1902). Lord Settrington accompanied Lord Roberts in the Dunnottar Castle, which sailed on March 7, 1900. As a personal friend of the Commander-in-chief's family, Lady Settrington saw and heard a good deal during her short visit, and some of her observations throw light on subjects hardly touched on by more voluminous writers. It is stated that Queen Victoria cabled to Sir Alfred Milner suggesting that all "English ladies at Cape Town should be ordered back to England at once," a suggestion which could not be carried out unless Cape Town were put under Martial Law. Amusing stories are told of the eccentricities of a certain lady who, with the best intentions, seems to have been quite irrepresible in her somewhat inconvenient attentions to the hospitals. With reference to the enteric fever, it is remarked that it was almost impossible to keep pace with the outbreak, but on the whole the author puts in a good word with regard to the general state of the hospitals. It is stated that important "secrets" very often became generally known, but the rumours that Lords Roberts and Kitchener "did not get on together" are emphatically denied, Lady Settrington asserting that she frequently heard scraps of their conversations which convinced her "how perfectly they were working together." There are some curious notes referring to the somewhat luxurious habits of some of the English members of society under the existing circumstances; of General Brabazon and Lord Valentia it is surmised that "they were reluctant to leave their French cook and green Chartreuse at Pretoria, and it is related how the Duke of Marlborough brought out a brougham with him, which (after much indignation on the part of the military authorities that it should have been allowed to come up by rail when every truck was urgently needed to bring up food for men and horses) was promptly seized for the use of the hospitals. With regard to the Hospital Commission, it is remarked that, travelling with such luxury as they did, made it very hard for them to understand the difficulties there had been in getting things up-country.

The statements are of an ex parte character, and contain many inaccuracies, the speaker making no effort to conceal his animosity and bias against Great Britain. Referring to what is characterised as the "almost continuous controversy between Great Britain and the Boer people," it is remarked that "Upon the one side it has been a heroic struggle for justice and right, and upon the other the exercise of brutal force for oppression and wrong." Regarding the 1881 Annexation of the Transvaal, it is asserted that "the act of the great British Government, in forcibly attempting to annex the little Transvaal State, was one of the most diabolical instances of greed and capacity, of tyranny and usurpation, ever known in the history of the world." The Administration of the United States were entreated to use their best endeavours to mediate between the belligerents under "the provisions of the Treaty of the Hague."

The writer remarks, "The collection of birds made by the late Mr. Frank Oates was formed by that gentleman with the greatest care, and it is seldom that it falls to the lot of the naturalist to examine a series of birds in which the particulars of capture are so carefully noted on each specimen as in the present instance. For this reason alone, therefore, the collection is of great importance; but besides this, it represents without doubt a very fair idea of the avifauna of the parts of the Transvaal and Matabele countries through which Mr. Oates travelled."

Mr. Shaw established the first Wesleyan Mission Station in the interior of South Africa, where he arrived in the year 1815, and he gives an account of the settlement at Lily Fountain, and the progress of the missionary work amongst the natives. The volume contains "a history of the discovery of the grand promontory of the Cape of Good Hope," together with chapters on the Hottentots, Bushmen, Corannas, Namaquas, Kaffirs, Bechuanas, and other tribes, which afford one of the best descriptions of the native races of South Africa, published up to this period. There are also some notes on the fauna of the country, and many references to other pioneer missionaries. Mr. Shaw returned to England in 1837, but he eventually went back to South Africa and settled at Rondebosch, near Cape Town, where he died on June 21, 1857.

The writer states that in his opinion the alluvial diamonds "have not been washed down from some higher region. . . . I believe that the diamonds have come from some rock which may have now vanished, but which existed formerly throughout the whole region." The papers deal with "The Middle Vaal Region," "The Lower Vaal Region," and "The Free State Diamond Field of Du Toit's Pan," a final chapter being devoted to "General Conclusions." It is interesting to note Dr. Shaw's theory that "the absence of minute diamonds . . . is to be explained by the fact that the river would wash them down, and therefore these may yet turn up somewhere west"; the discoveries in German South-West Africa appear to bear out this theory.

While asserting his belief that the South African War (1899-1902) was inevitable, the author considered that it had become "a solemn personal responsibility for every subject of the King to consider . . . how far it is possible to formulate any proposals for peace on a basis acceptable to the Boers." He maintains that "the cry of the children . . . on the Veld and in the concentration camps . . . accuses every one whose ambition and lust of gold have directly aided in bringing about this war."

This speech was delivered in the House of Commons on February 17, 1904, and in it Mr. Shaw complains that the British Government have not "inquired into this subject of Chinese labour, and that the Transvaal Labour Commission . . . excluded this question from the Commission." He notes that Sir George Farrar was quoted and defended by the Colonial Secretary, and asks whether this was the "G. Farrar" who "signed the famous forged telegram about the women and children in Johannesburg? Is this man, sentenced to death for high treason in one country, to be the trusted adviser in another?" He referred to the experiences of independent men like Mr. Creswell, Manager of the Village Main Reef Company, and Mr. Moneypenny, Editor of the Johannesburg Star, in consequence of their views on the subject of Chinese labour, and asserts that "if the Boers had imposed such conditions upon any human being, every Jingo in this country would have fanned the flames of war in the names of civilisation, liberty, and humanity."

*SHAW, Rev. WILLIAM: A Letter to the Right Hon. the Earl of Aberdeen, K.C.B., one of his Majesty's principal Secretaries of State, &c. &c. &c., on the subject of the late Irruption of the Caffres into the British Settlement of Albany, South Africa. By William Shaw, late Wesleyan Missionary in Albany and Caffraria. London: Published by John Mason. . . . 20 pp. 8vo. 1835.

The writer, who accompanied the first settlers in Albany in 1820 as Wesleyan minister, repels the accusation against the colonists that cruelty and injustice on their part towards the Kaffirs provoked the war. He considered that the vacillation exhibited by the Government with regard to the Border policy was answerable for much of the mischief, but was of opinion that the principal cause of the frequent collisions between the natives and the colonists lay in "the moral state and habits of the Kaffir tribes." He deprecated the practice of many authors of giving such glowing descriptions of the "noble and generous-minded Kaffirs," and remarks that these tribes "have very indistinct notions of the rights of property, and are fearfully reckless of the destruction of human life." He comments on the fact that no "written treaty" existed, to which the Kaffir chiefs were contracting parties, and states that in an agreement made with Gaika in 1819 it was arranged that he should cede certain lands which were the property of other tribes, according to the statements of the chiefs of the Amagonakwaybie tribe. . . . Other land grievances of the Kaffirs are mentioned, and it is stated that on one occasion the natives were forcibly ejected and their huts burnt, while their country was handed over to the Hottentots.

The writer sums up his recommendations in nine clauses which he suggests as desirable to be carried out by the British Government. Amongst these it is provided that a cattle indemnity should be paid by the natives and compensation afforded to the settlers, the Keiskamma to be settled as the boundary of the colony under a "written treaty of peace," the tribes of the Amagonakwaybie to be offered their entire ancient territory, and other tribes portions of the neutral ground, a Lieutenant-Governor to be appointed for the Eastern Province of the Colony, with the seat of government at Graham's Town, &c. &c. &c.

Mr. Shaw complains that Dr. Philip wrote to Sir Benjamin D'Urban to the effect that "the Wesleyan missionaries have always been eulogistic of Colonel Somerset, and they have always been in the habit of praising him and defending all his commands, more than the missionaries of other societies." In a letter to Dr. Philip the Wesleyan missionary observed, "Until an explanation is received from you . . . the Wesleyan missionaries cannot consent to greet you with the right hand of fellowship . . . or accept any invitation to attend any public meeting connected with the London Society's Mission." Dr. Philip replied in a lengthy communication and a heated correspondence ensued. Mr. Shaw did not reply to Dr. Philip's last letter, but he makes some observations in a concluding chapter of this work respecting "the most unkind and unfair treatment which we have received from Dr. Philip."

Early in February 1820 the author (aged twenty-one) and his wife and child embarked in the Aurora, being attached to "Sephton's Party" of the Albany settlers, and the volume contains an account of the early days of the Eastern province, and of the progress of the 1820 settlers, together with some particulars of their grievances and disasters, and some references to the misunderstandings which arose between the Wesleyan missionaries and Dr. Philip. Considerable information is afforded respecting Kaffraria and the border settlements, also an account of the Fingos, notes on the Bechuana country, Natal, the superstitions of the various native races, together with a comprehensive history of the progress of the missionary institutions of South-East Africa.

*(SHAW, Rev. WILLIAM): Memoir of the Rev. William Shaw, late general superintendent of the Wesleyan Missions in South-Eastern Africa. Edited by his oldest surviving friend. With portrait, map, and views. London: Sold at the Wesleyan Conference Office. vi + 463 pp. Cr. 8vo. 1874.

William Shaw was born at Glasgow on December 8, 1798, and was brought up as a member of the Established Church. Early in life he became converted to Methodism, and after some study and preparation in England left for the Cape with the 1820 settlers. The volume gives an account of his missionary labours and journeys in South Africa, together with some particulars respecting the establishment, rise, and progress of the Albany settlements, the Kaffir wars and Mission, and the condition of the frontier states in the middle of the nineteenth century. Mr. Shaw led an active life as a supernumerary in England after his retirement from the Cape, and died in London on December 4, 1872.

interesting information respecting the Kaffir Wars. Charles Shervinton received a commission as Captain in the Cape Mounted Rifles from Lord Wolseley, "in recognition of his services in Zululand," but Tom Shervinton died in 1880 at the age of twenty-one.

A violent attack upon British foreign policy with regard to "Little Wars," more particularly with reference to the South African War (1899-1902). It is stated that "the Dutch Afrikanders . . . hitherto have been the most loyal of Colonists," and in alluding to recent wars in which Great Britain was engaged the writer remarks that "this war against the Transvaal, if to war it should come, will be the dirtiest, the most disreputable, and the most dastardly of them all."

A curious and interesting tale of an officer who rose from the ranks, first published in 1829. Shipp went to the Cape with his regiment at the close of the eighteenth century, during the first British Occupation, and he gives a very lucid description of the miseries of soldiers on board a transport ship at this period. Later on, he proceeded to Port Elizabeth with a rifle company, formed from several regiments, and was stationed at "Graffenette" (Graaff-Reinet), which he stated was 1500 miles from Cape Town! Much of the information afforded is more quaint than correct, but the love-scenes with the fair "Sabina" are somewhat amusing.

- *SHIPPARD, Sir SIDNEY : The Administration of Justice in South Africa. In vol. xxviii., "Proceedings of the Royal Colonial Institute," pp. 81-112. 8vo. 1897.

In the course of his address, Sir Sidney Shippard stated that the British Government had "conceded to the original Colonists of the Cape the privilege of retaining the antiquated laws and customs of Holland as they existed prior to the introduction of the Code Napoleon into that country." He observed that it was a "matter of regret that undue tolerance should have been extended to what they are pleased to call their language. They thus have been enabled to build around themselves . . . a kind of Chinese Wall, figuratively speaking, by continuing to use a nondescript mixture of Dutch, French, and divers other tongues, forming a sort of bucolic dialect peculiar to themselves . . . in itself an insurmountable barrier against intellectual progress, expansion, or enlightenment of any kind." The speaker proceeded to illustrate the points of difference between English and old Roman-Dutch law with regard to slavery, divorce, inheritance, and other important matters, and advocated the establishment of a court of appeal for the British Colonies, affording the Dutch Republics facilities for taking part in the system.

Some account of Bechuanaland and of the history of the negotiations and policy which led to the acquirement of the territory by the Cape Colony.

The writer remarks "that the German project of annexing Bechuanaland in addition to Great Namaqualand and Damaraland was foiled, was in no small degree owing to the foresight and firmness of Mr. Cecil Rhodes." There are some particulars referring to Sir Sidney Shippard's visit to Lobengula, and of a meeting of the chiefs of the Bechuanaland Protectorate at which Sebele proposed that Sir Sidney should be put to death, in order that the chiefs might assert their independence.

One of the best works on the native races of Natal and Zululand published up to the middle of the nineteenth century. The author took great pains to gain an accurate knowledge of the habits of the people during his four years' residence in Natal, and the results of his researches have been amplified by the addition of information collected from the works of Döhne, Isaacs, and others, and the MSS. of "the unfortunate traveller, Green," and from the evidence given by Mr. Fynn before a special commission. The volume contains a history of Chaka and his successors, together with a complete account of the personal appearance, mode of life, and the political, social, and domestic institutions of the natives, with information respecting their superstitions, laws, warfare, and manufactures. In the appendix will be found "A Sketch of Natal," and a short grammar of the Kaffir language, and there are four lithographic plates, from sketches by Mr. E. Redinger of Natal, and a number of woodcuts in the letter-press.

The work was compiled from notes originally drawn up for the use of the senior classes at the Albert Academy, Burghersdorp, and although it has been written mainly for school purposes, the contents are so concisely arranged that it can serve as a text-book for those who have not the leisure to study the more lengthy productions of other authors. Gysbert de Groot, Boek-verkoper op de Nieuwen- | dijk tusschen de twee Haarlemmer Sluysen in de Groote Bybel. 24 pp. Sm. Quarto. 1728.

The dismal and unfortunate narrative of the ship Gouden Buys, which sailed in the service of the East India Company from Enckhuysen on the 4th of May, in the year 1693, under the command of Captain Theunis Baanman. From the sworn depositions of Daniel Silleman, dyke builder, and Lourens Thyssen, carpenter, who alone were saved out of 190 souls on board.

In Fairbridge and Noble's Catalogue (1886), and Theal's "History of South Africa, 1496-1691," this pamphlet is stated to have been published at Enkhuizen (or Enckhuysen). Theal gives the date of the publication as 1694, Fairbridge notes it as "N.D."; it would appear, therefore, that they mentioned different editions. This edition, having only 24 pages, must be a slightly curtailed version of the narrative in the copy mentioned by Theal, which is stated to have had 28 pages. According to Mr. Theal's notes, "The Gouden Buys sailed from Enckhuysen on the 4th of May, 1693, with 190 souls on board, and on the 19th of October dropped anchor in St. Helena Bay, when there were only six men capable of working, all the others having died, or being ill, with scurvy. On the 11th of November seven men left the ship with the object of seeking assistance inland. The pamphlet of 28 pages is principally taken up with an account of the terrible sufferings which they underwent in their wanderings along the Berg River, until ultimately Thyssen was rescued by Hottentots, and taken to the Company's post at Saldanha Bay, and Silleman, after roaming about for seven weeks and a half, returned to St. Helena Bay, and found some small vessels there which had been sent by the Governor to the assistance of the Gouden Buys. The remaining 188 all perished. Silleman and Thyssen relate but little that is of importance concerning the condition of the country, but their account of the friendly disposition of the Hottentots towards the Europeans is interesting."

Life of the Venerable Father Gonzalez da Silveira, priest of the Society of Jesus, martyrised in Monomotapa, Kaffraria. Translated from the Latin into Castillian, by Bernard de Cienfuegos. Dedicated to Don Luis de Sylveira, Count of Sortella, &c. &c. . . .

The work was first published in Latin under the title of "Vita Patris Gonzali Sylveriae, Societatis Jesu Sacerdotis. In Urbem Monomotapa martyrium passi; Lugduni Sumptibus Horatio Cardon 1612," and, according to Wilmot (Monomotapa, 1896), the author of this work was Father Nicholas Godigno. The references to Silveira are chiefly to be found in the Letters from the Fathers of the Society of Jesus in the Collection in the Royal Library, Lisbon; Documents in the Archives and Library of the Vatican; the folio edition (Orlandini) of the "Historia Societatis Jesu," &c. &c., but much information is afforded in the second volume of "Records of South-Eastern Africa" (Theal, 1898), and "The Portuguese in South Africa" (Theal, 1896). There is also a full account of the "Mission and Martyrdom of Father Silveira," which was written by Father Du Jarric circa 1615, translated by the Rev. John Allen, and reproduced in "The Catholic Church and the Kaffir," by the Right Rev. Dr. Ricards (1879), a little volume which also contains an interesting account of the martyr by the Rev. Father Greene, S.J.

Gonzalez da Silveira was born at Almerino, Portugal, in 1526, and joining the Society of Jesus, "entered on his missionary career with extraordinary ardour and courage." He went to India (1556) for three years, after which period he proceeded to Kaffraria, reaching Mozambique in February 1560. He was at first well received by the King of Monomotapa, but intrigues carried out by some Mohammedans aroused the anger of the monarch, and despite the fact that he had been baptized, he gave orders for the execution of Silveira, which was carried out on the 15th of March 1561.

Simpkin, Marshall & Co. . . . 30 pp. Cr. 8vo. 1870.

The Preface states that this work was published to meet the numerous inquiries consequent upon the diamond discoveries in a comparatively little known region in South Africa. These discoveries were confined to the alluvial deposits on the Vaal River, nothing concerning the "dry" or permanent mines around the present town of Kimberley being afforded in this publication. Routes are given from five sea-ports to the diamond fields, with full instructions for the journey, and there is an article on the Cape Colony by John Croumbie Brown, together with some information respecting Natal, by "W.M." The pamphlet contains reproductions of some interesting letters to the Times, describing the new fields, together with some extracts from private communications containing data concerning the alluvial diggings in the year 1870, and there is a copy of the "regulations" for the "Vaal River Diamond Fields," signed by P. D. J. Vanderbyl.

A publication in the form of a pocket-book, containing general information regarding South Africa brought up to the date of issue. Very little is stated respecting the diamond fields, and that little is not very accurate, as it is remarked that £10,000 had been taken out of Kimberley mine since 1871, a ridiculous estimate of the product of the mine up to this period. In other respects the work must have been very useful to emigrants of all classes.

This publication gives in a small compass a large amount of information as to the state of South Africa at this period; the gazetteer is especially useful, and there is a good index. The histories of the various states are concise and unbiassed, the description of the flowers, fruits, and forests of the country is well worthy of attention, and there is a map of South Africa, and many illustrations. The first edition, published in 1879, was compiled and edited by Mr (afterwards Sir) T. E. Fuller, later on appointed Agent General for the Cape Colony.

Pages 75-98 are devoted to an account of "Pastoral and Agricultural Life in Africa," reference being made to the Kaffirs and Bushmen, the latter being represented as having been converted "from peaceful shepherds and herdsmen" to "predatory savages . . . in consequence of the wars with Europeans, and the cruel treatment they have experienced from the past colonists."

The volume contains a few coloured prints.

Smellekamp was formally arrested on the charge of travelling in South Africa without a pass, and he asserted that he came from Amsterdam in the Brazilia, with Captain Reus, as supercargo, to trade with the Dutch emigrants in Port Natal, and that neither he nor the captain "had any authority to enter into political or other arrangements with the emigrant farmers . . . it was simply a trading voyage." Nevertheless, he and the captain were present at a meeting of the Volksraad held on their arrival, and Smellekamp observes, "The object which I had in attending the meeting of the Volksraad was to make myself acquainted . . . with the kind of articles which the farmers would require. . . . The farmers seemed to be under the impression that their position was not sufficiently understood in Holland, and they therefore wished me to publish an account of it. . . . The Volksraad asked my opinion as to whether . . . the Dutch Government would interfere in their favour. To which I replied that I could offer no opinion on the subject." Smellekamp was released, but it transpired that on a subsequent trip of the Brazilia, Mr. Ohrig's pamphlet

Smellekamp, J. A.: Mijn Wedervaren in de Z. A. Republiek met den predikant D. van der Hoff
 Hoff 14. 24 't H. Marais Kaapstad, 1854

(respecting the occupation of Natal) was extensively circulated by him amongst the emigrant farmers. The matter was referred to Holland, and the government of the Netherlands promptly gave the strongest assurances that they "declined to countenance any act that could be construed into encouraging the emigrants to resist British authority" (Theal). This assurance was printed and circulated amongst the emigrants, who, however, professed to regard the document as a forgery. After much tampering with the farmers, Smellekamp proceeded to Delagoa Bay, and wrote to the Volksraad "that they need not expect aid from Holland." Many particulars regarding Smellekamp's transactions will be found in Theal's "History of South Africa, 1834-1854," and Bird's "Annals of Natal."

Many of the papers were written especially for the natives, and deal with social questions affecting them, whilst others treat of the " Analogy between South Africa and Palestine," " The Future of the African Race," " The Kaffir—whence and whither ?" and other interesting subjects. The author was of opinion " that the Kaffir is a Zulu with an infusion of Hottentot blood," and disagrees with the theory that these natives have Arab blood in their veins. An interesting chapter describes " the principles on which Lovedale has been conducted," of which the first is stated to be " the brigading of Europeans and natives together in their true relation to one another." It is asserted that " The Afrikander Bond party regard all this with bitter hatred, and no wonder. They do not know how to treat barbarous peoples, except by reducing them to serfdom, and they dishonour the Empire by their proposals about natives. . . ."

The plants described in this volume are stated to have " been in use among the natives for medicinal purposes for a very long period. At a meeting of the South African Literary and Scientific Institution held on June 1, 1833, at Cape Town, a letter was read detailing the progress and discoveries of a trading party, which had penetrated into the interior of South Africa in a direction north of Lattakoo. The communication (which had been forwarded to the society under instructions from the Governor of the Colony, Sir G. L. Cole) excited great interest amongst the members, who thereupon decided to make arrangements to despatch an expedition under Dr. Andrew Smith to explore this part of the continent. It was arranged that funds should be raised by the issue of shares of the value of £3, each of the subscribers being entitled to a participation in the collection acquired in the course of the expedition. On June 24th a public meeting was held, to further the objects of the Association, which was presided over by the Governor, who announced that up to then 179 shares had been taken up, but that the estimated cost of the enterprise would be from £1000 to £1500. A committee was formed to draw up instructions for the officers of the expedition, who put on record "the objects and destination of the expedition, the period most proper for its departure, and the prosecution of the journey; and the nature of its appointment and equipment." At the same time, it was resolved to send letters to the Secretary of State for the Colonies, and to the Secretaries of War and the Admiralty, asking for their patronage and assistance, and for leave for Dr. Smith, who was a surgeon in the army. Necessary funds having been provided, the supplies and equipment were purchased and shipped to Algoa Bay, and the expedition started on its journey on August 12, 1834, reaching the Orange River a fortnight later. Here the travellers met the Revs. Kolbe and Pellisier, who rendered them much assistance, after which the journey was proceeded with to the Basuto country, where they were entertained by Mr. Casalis at the station at Moriah. They interviewed Moshesh, who did everything in his power to dissuade them from visiting Moselekatse, the celebrated Matabele chief: this, however, they had decided to do, and journeying through Bechuanaland (meeting en route Messrs. Edwards, Jenkins, Archbell, and Alison) they arrived at Kuruman on January 30, 1836, where they were received by Messrs. Moffat and Hamilton, the well-known missionaries. Early in June they visited Moselekatse, being accompanied by Mr. Moffat, and soon after they proceeded to the Limpopo River, and then returned to Cape Town. The appendix in the "Report of the Expedition" gives considerable information respecting the fauna, botany, and mineralogy of the country traversed, together with full particulars of the large collection of skins, geological specimens, weapons, and curiosities collected by the expedition.

These pamphlets are exceedingly scarce, but after considerable search I discovered all three at the library of the Colonial Office, London. Later on I succeeded in acquiring a copy of the "Report of the Expedition," which had been in the successive possession of three well-known men in connection with Africa, viz.: L. Pappe, E. L. Layard, and H. B. Tristram. Pappe's signature is at the bottom of the title-page, and at the top is an inscription—"Canon Tristram from E. L. Layard." A long and interesting letter from Layard to Tristram is pasted into the volume, which also contains the latter's book-plate ("Henrici Baker Tristram e. Coll. Linc. Oxon.")—S. M.

*SMITH, Sir ANDREW: Illustrations of the Zoology of South Africa; consisting chiefly of figures and descriptions of the objects of natural history collected during an expedition into the interior of South Africa, in the years 1834, 1835, and 1836; fitted out by

"The Cape of Good Hope Association for Exploring Central Africa." By Dr. Andrew Smith, M.D., Deputy-Inspector-General of Army Hospitals; Director of the Expedition. Published under the Authority of the Lords Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury. (Five Volumes.) Mammalia—Pisces—Aves—Reptilia—Invertebrata. (Bound in three Volumes.) London: Smith, Elder & Co. . . . (No Pagination.) Roy. Quarto. 1849.

This handsome and valuable work gives full particulars of the natural history subjects of South Africa, collected by Dr. Andrew Smith's expedition in the country lying between 25° and 27° 58' east longitude and 31° and 23° 28' south latitude, embracing part of the Cape Colony, Natal, and "Kaffirland." The illustrations, which are of a very high order, were executed by Mr. George Ford, who accompanied the expedition, and consist of five plain and 273 coloured plates, while the letterpress is of a most accurate and exhaustive character. Part of the expense of the publication was defrayed by the British Government, in order that the work "might be sold at a price which would place it within the reach of the generality of naturalists." The plates were published in five divisions, "numbered independently, and the letterpress descriptions left unpagged, in order that they may be arranged according to the particular view of purchasers. An index to each division is given." In consequence of this arrangement this work is sometimes bound in three volumes and sometimes in four.

"ARDVERIKIE (SCOTLAND),
Aug. 26, 1847.

"The Queen has received Field-Marshal the Duke of Wellington's letter and approves that Sir Harry Smith should receive the local rank of Lt.-General."

The letter has the Queen's monogram surmounted by a crown, in gold, in the corner.

2. Portrait of Sir Harry Smith, published by Richard Bentley in 1848.

3. Printed General Order to the troops in Cape Town, dated Oct. 16, 1849. The order refers to the disturbances in Cape Town connected with the arrival of the "convict ship," when a section of the inhabitants determined to withhold supplies from the troops, the ships of the navy, and the convicts on board. The Governor congratulates the "hungry sailors and soldiers" for the forbearance they exercised under such trying circumstances and concludes by observing, "Soldiers! once more I desire you to persevere in this line of conduct, which will enable me to restore harmony and tranquillity to this Colony."

4. Cape of Good Hope Government Gazette Extraordinary, published Tuesday, October 16, 1849. This proclamation, which is printed in English and Dutch, refers to the riots caused by unruly mobs in Cape Town and Green Point the preceding night, prohibiting all mobs, crowds, and meetings, and authorising and enjoining "the Police force, supported, if necessary, by the Military Power, to prevent the formation of all mobs or crowds of persons," and to disperse any mobs or crowds which may have been formed.

Letters from Sir Harry Smith to Andries Hendrik Potgieter, together with the Manifesto of the Trek Boers (said to be signed by 1050), addressed to the Governor and High Commissioner of the Cape of Good Hope. The Manifesto entreats the Governor "to leave us at peace and without further interference upon lands we have honestly procured from the lawful proprietors." Sir Harry, in a letter to "Mynheer Potgieter," dated June 2, 1848, refers to his proclamations and remarks that these were published "for the benefit of all who have become emigrants—for no subject of any country can divest himself of the allegiance he owes his country. You are all, and must for ever be, British subjects."

*(SMITH, Sir HARRY): The Autobiography of Lieutenant-General Sir Harry Smith, Baronet, of Aliwal on the Sutlej, G.C.B. Edited, with the addition of some supplementary chapters, by G. C. Moore Smith, M.A. In two volumes. Vol. I. xxiv + 382 pp.; Vol. II. ix + 434 pp. With portraits and illustrations. London: John Murray. . . . 8vo. 1901.

From the year 1787 to the year 1846 the work is an autobiography, but from 1846 to 1860 it has been compiled by the editor, the first volume dealing with the life and campaigns of Sir Harry Smith in Europe and America, while the second volume traverses his services in Asia and Africa. At the start of Sir Harry's career he was gazetted second lieutenant in the 95th Regiment of Riflemen, in May 1805, and he was in active service for fifty-four years. His experiences in the Peninsular War are full of the deepest interest, and his account of them is very animated, throwing much light on the brilliant group of warriors who conducted the operations which finally resulted in the shattering of Napoleon's power at Waterloo. His marriage, which took place in Spain, was of a very romantic nature, his wife (Juana) being hardly fourteen years of age at the time of her wedding. Throughout the work she is always referred to with greatest love, admiration, and respect, not only on the part of her husband, but also by every one who came in contact with her. Her courage and spirit appear to have been quite extraordinary, and the young Spanish girl seems to have been the idol of her husband's friends and the soldiers under his command. Harry Smith received the order of C.B. after the Battle of Waterloo, by which time he had risen to the rank of Lieut.-Colonel. His first appointment in South Africa was as Deputy-Quartermaster-General at the Cape in 1829, and he remained there on that occasion till the year 1840.

For the first five years the country was at peace, and he had time to study the different problems of civil and military life at the Cape. On the whole he appears to have had a liking for the Boers, and he speaks well of their hospitality, and, in some cases, of their courage and ability in the field. In 1835 he was deputed by the Governor, Sir B. D'Urban, to take charge of the troops on the outbreak of the Kaffir War, and his energy and celerity won the warmest praise from the Commander-in-Chief. During the course of the hostilities the Kaffir chief Hintza was shot while endeavouring to escape, and Smith was bitterly attacked for this by Lord Glenelg, then Minister for the Colonies. On the close of the campaign, however, he was appointed to the command of the district then known as the "Province of Queen Adelaide." This province was soon after restored to the Kaffirs by the Home Government, and Captain Stockenstrom superseded Colonel Smith in the command of the frontier troops. The latter's return was marked by the sympathy and approbation of the inhabitants of Grahamstown and Cape Town, who seem to have done everything in their power to show their appreciation of his talent and ability. In the meantime he had been appointed to the important post of Adjutant-General to the forces in India, and he left for that country in June 1840. In the course of his stay, he fought and won the battle of Aliwal, for which he received the thanks of the Houses of Parliament, and was made a Baronet (April 4, 1846), and raised to the rank of Major-General. Returning to England in 1847, he was appointed Governor of the Cape of Good Hope and High Commissioner for South Africa, and he arrived in Table Bay on December 1st, being received with the utmost enthusiasm by the inhabitants of the Cape Colony. One of his first acts was to re-annex that part of the country which had been relinquished to the Kaffirs by Lord Glenelg (Queen Adelaide's Province), and in a short time he restored peace throughout Kaffraria. Sir Harry Smith then turned his attention to the country between the Orange and Vaal Rivers, which he declared subject to the Queen, and annexed to the Crown under the title of the Orange River Sovereignty, but a short time after this, a rising of the Boers under Pretorius took place, which was speedily crushed at the battle of Boomplatz, after which the insurrection quickly subsided. In 1849, the Anti-Convict Agitation was at its full height in Cape Town, and the Governor had considerable difficulties with his council and the general population; he managed, however, to curb the indignation of the people until the matter was satisfactorily settled by the Home Government. War broke out again in Kaffraria in 1850, and was carried on with the greatest vigour and much success, but an agitation was got up against the Governor in the British Parliament, which eventually resulted in his recall. It is somewhat difficult to reconcile the despatch of Lord Grey on January 14, 1852, in which Sir Harry Smith was recalled "for want of energy and judgment in conducting the war," and the statement of the Duke of Wellington in Parliament on February 5, 1852, in which he speaks in the highest terms of the Governor's skill and ability, and there seems little doubt that he was sacrificed to party politics of a very questionable nature. On leaving South Africa he was presented with addresses and plate, and the populace parted from him with every sign of regret, but by the time he reached England, the Government which had dismissed him had fallen, and the warmth with which he was received by all classes of the public and the army must have made some amends for the harsh treatment he had received at the hands of Lord Grey. In January 1853 he was appointed Lieut.-Governor of Plymouth, with the command of the Western districts, and on September 29, 1854, was transferred to the command of the Northern and Midland Districts at Manchester. The veteran General died on the 12th of October 1860. Several towns in South Africa are named after Sir Harry Smith and his wife, amongst which are Harrismith, founded in 1849, Ladysmith, founded in 1851, and Aliwal North.

The subject of the memoir was of Dutch extraction, and was born at the Cape in 1794. Her name is frequently mentioned in the "periodical publications of the London Missionary Society, as the friend of Dr. Van Der Kemp, and a zealous labourer in the cause of missions"; in November 1805 she set out for Bethelsdorp, where she arrived on January 5, 1806, and took part in the mission to the Hottentots. She died in Cape Town on November 16, 1821, at the age of seventy-two. A portrait of Mrs. Smith forms the frontispiece to the volume.

Published by the author, H. G. Soames. Printed by Kenneth B. Dickson (Johannesburg). 28 pp. Cr. 8vo. N.D. (1902).

A series of letters published in the Times of Natal, the Cape Times, the Natal Witness, &c., during the year 1900. "The German Press" was published in the two first-named papers, and the writer expresses his opinion that the slanders on the British were inserted only in a few obscure prints, and that the authors of these fabrications would be flattered to learn that their "works" had been accepted as "German opinion." The second letter consists of a rather bitter attack upon the inhabitants of Natal, and the writer complains that the editor of the Natal Witness unwarrantably added the word "greedy" to the title of the letter. He severely attacks the colony for "clamouring to slice up both Republics for her 'sacrifices.'" The article on "Race Hatred" endeavours to prove that the war was not the creation of capitalists or politicians, but the "evolution of the survival of the fittest," and denies that any responsible party in Germany was hostile to England. "Exit—Africander" is a short attack on the expression "Africander" and "the poor ignoble taal." As an example of the constant repetitions in proper names current with the speakers of this garbled patois, it is stated that there are no less than 66 Rietfonteins in the Transvaal and Orange River Colonies, duly recognised on maps and handbooks, and probably many more not recorded. No. 6 of the series is an open letter to the editor of the Natal Witness, who declined to publish an effusion so uncomplimentary to the policy of the paper.

*(SOGA, TIYO) : Tiyo Soga : A Page of South African Mission Work. By John A. Chalmers. Second and Revised Edition. Edinburgh : Andrew Elliot. London : Hodder & Stoughton. Glasgow : David Bryce & Son. Grahamstown, Cape Colony : James Hay. viii + 488 pp. Cr. 8vo. 1878.

The life of Tiyo Soga forms a unique record of one of the most notable examples of the possibilities of education amongst the aborigines of South Africa. The subject of the memoir was a full-blooded Kaffir; his father was a chief councillor of the Gaika tribe, "a polygamist, the husband of eight accredited wives, and the father of thirty-nine children"; his mother, Nosutu, was the great wife of the councillor, and Tiyo was her seventh son, born in 1829. He was brought up as a heathen, but early in life came under the influence of missionaries stationed at Chumie, and eventually his mother, some of his brothers, and himself, became Christians. Tiyo's education was first undertaken by Mr. Chalmers, who succeeded in getting the young Kaffir admitted into the Lovedale Institute. During the "War of the Axe," and the subsequent devastation of the country, he managed to keep up his reading at the Kat River Settlement, to which place he had fled for refuge with his mother; and here, "whilst men, women, and children were fast dying from hunger, the asseguy, the rifle, and the cannon ball, Tiyo found stealthy opportunity for pursuing his studies." His zeal and assiduity were such that Mr. Govan, the head of the Institute, decided to take him to Scotland to be educated. The party left Port Elizabeth in July 1846, but Tiyo only remained eighteen months in North Britain, and returned to South Africa as a Catechist at a salary of £25 a year. Kaffraria was in a state of war on his return, and in June 1851 he left again for Scotland, this time with Mr. Niven. His studies were proceeded with, and he proved a diligent, though not a brilliant scholar; but his amiable character and blameless conduct soon made him universally popular amongst his masters and companions. After some years of careful training, he was "licensed to preach the Gospel by the United Presbytery of Glasgow," and it is recorded that the total amount which had been expended on his education and support was covered by the moderate sum of £202. On the 27th of February he was married to Miss Janet Burnside, and soon after left for Africa with his wife. They found Kaffraria in a most deplorable state, owing to the disastrous effects of Mhlakaza's false prophecies, which had brought about a severe famine. Soon, however, the station at Mgwali was commenced, and was for many years the object of Tiyo Soga's strenuous and unselfish labours, gradually becoming a place of some importance. In August 1860 he was invited by Sir George Grey to accompany Sandilli and Mr. Brownlee to Cape Town on the occasion of the visit of Prince Alfred, and there are some interesting notes respecting the voyage and the passengers. On June 15, 1862, he succeeded in finishing and consecrating his church, and in 1866 completed the first part of his translation of the "Pilgrim's Progress" into the Kaffir language. His health, however, had long been feeble, and after a useful life he died on August 12, 1871, aged forty-two. According to the author, "Tiyo Soga was a thorough gentleman. He was a black man. He knew it, and like Othello, never forgot that he was black. Despite his colour there never lived a more polished gentleman."

Voyage to the East Indies and China, made by order of the King, between the year 1744 and 1781: in which are discussed the customs, religion, sciences, and arts of the Indians, the Chinese, the Pegus, and the inhabitants of Madagascar; followed by observations on the Cape of Good Hope, the Isles of France and Bourbon, the Maldives, Ceylon, Malacca, the Philippines, and the Moluccas, together with researches into the natural history of these countries. By M. Sonnerat, Naval Commissioner, Naturalist to the King, Correspondent to his Cabinet, and of the Royal Academy of Sciences of Paris, and Member of the Academy of Lyons.

The author was born at Lyons about 1745, and made several voyages to the East Indies, &c. He spent many years in travelling in Mauritius, Bourbon, Madagascar, New Guinea, and other places, and acquired a rich collection of natural curiosities. On his return to France in 1781 he published an account of his travels, in two quarto volumes, which was followed by another edition in three volumes, issued in the same year. According to Theal ("History of South Africa, 1691-1795"), "Sonnerat called at the Cape on several occasions, and in 1781 spent some weeks there. He is mentioned by other travellers of the time, who considered the meeting of a man of such eminence in the study of natural history a noteworthy event. In the volume referred to (the Dutch edition) there is but one chapter upon the Cape Colony, and it only covers five pages. These are pages of correct information. . . . ." In the first quarto edition there are four pages dealing with the Cape, and there are two double page illustrations of "Caffres" and "Hottentots." Sonnerat mentions Colonel Gordon, the Commander of the Dutch troops at the Cape, and remarks that he was a most interesting man to know, and had made three journeys into the interior: he states that he was the only person to go to for information respecting the original inhabitants of the country and its fauna and flora, and he observes that he hopes that he will be enabled to obtain much information from Gordon's journals when published.

Manoel de Sousa left Cochim on February 3, 1552, and met with a gale on the Natal coast which drove the ship ashore on May 12th. De Sousa and his wife and children and about thirty others were landed, and later on a large number of the ships' company and some slaves escaped from the wreck. They endeavoured to reach Sofala, but encountered terrible privations, and were constantly attacked by the natives, and finally De Sousa and his wife and children were stripped by the Kaffirs and perished. Only eight Portuguese and some slaves eventually escaped to Mozambique. It was said the value of the cargo of the ill-fated vessel was worth a million in gold. London: John Murray. Pp. 105-145. Roy. 8vo. 1877.

The writer remarks, "The South African Boer has till lately been regarded in England as little better than a savage. We must learn to know his fairer side. The type is unchanging. As he was in 1806 in the Colony so he is in 1876 in the republics of the interior. He is uncultivated, he is unprogressive, but he possesses qualities which even here will be regarded as not without value." A synopsis of the history of South Africa is given, and it is asserted that "persons who dislike the Boers and disapprove of their system of native management have . . . besieged the Colonial Office with passionate denunciations of them, in which truth and falsehood can with difficulty be separated." It is asserted that "the annexation of the Diamond Fields is perhaps the most discreditable incident in British Colonial history," and severe censure is passed on the British Government for the method in which the possession was acquired. The writer urges that Sir Bartle Frere should be appointed Governor of the Cape Colony, and asserts that "Cape Colonists of all parties" are convinced of his fitness for the post.

A History of South Africa written in the Taal, the first edition of which was published in 1877.

At the end of the account of the Transvaal War of Independence (1880-1), the following significant remarks occur:—

"At present, up country, under the management of certain Hollander advisers, the Transvaal Government are working for a divided instead of a United South Africa, and the sacrifices of the Cape Colony, when the Transvaal was in need and distress, owing to the annexation and the war, have been rewarded with the deepest ingratitude, whilst the Republic woos Natal, who plunged it into all its misfortunes. Nevertheless the Cape Colony and the Orange Free State continue to work for a United South Africa."

Vol. I. xiii + 467 pp.

Vol. II. Appended Statements, Maps, and Diagrams. v + 423 pp.

Published by Central News Agency, Ltd., South Africa. Quarto. 1908.

The objects of the work are discussed in the Preface, where it is observed that "the people of South Africa are learning to trace the many misfortunes that have visited them to a common source of mischief—events which long ago divided into separate states a country naturally fitted to be one." With the view of uniting the Colonies under one government, "a number of persons have been working together for the last twelve months" (1908), and amongst the methods for attaining their object, carried out by these associates, was the compilation and publication of this work. "The various persons who have shared in producing these volumes are not drawn from any one political school or party; and they have been joined in the work only by a common aspiration that the people of South Africa may become one." The scope of the work extends to a consideration of the various political aspects of "eleven different areas of government in South Africa," and deals with the primary and secondary functions of Government, the machinery of Political Control, the "Constitutional Method of Establishing South African Union," together with appended statements discussing in detail the vital questions of Administration throughout the South African Colonies.

Longmans, Green, Reader & Dyer, London. Adam & Charles Black, Edinburgh. Pp. 447-487. Roy. 8vo. 1877.

A criticism of the article published in the Quarterly Review of January 1877, viewed in the light of the "Further Correspondence" on South Africa published in the succeeding month. The paper displays some unfavourable features of the Boer character, more especially with regard to their treatment of the natives, to which, it is stated, all their difficulties with the British can be traced. The charge of slavery is fully dealt with, and certain criticisms upon the annexation of the Diamond Fields are ably replied to. The writer asserts that it has become necessary for us to show that "the ideal picture of the Dutch Boers . . . is almost as misleading as suppressio veri can make it, and that our inability to keep terms with them is due to a fundamental difference of principle in matters of humanity which is not to their advantage."

A rather extreme view of the Transvaal question from the Boer standpoint. The author, who wished his identity to remain a secret, is represented to have lived for many years with the "lusty people, who are again making a stand for liberty," &c. &c. (Meurant's "Sixty Years Ago.")

The paper was suppressed by a warrant of the Governor, Lord Charles Somerset, dated May the 8th, but a Postscript in the last number, published May 5th, states that "His Majesty's Fiscal" had assumed the Censorship of The South African Commercial Advertiser, and that in consequence the publication of the paper would be discontinued, "until we have applied for redress and direction to His Excellency the Governor and the British Government."

The writer observes that "no separate account of the ferns" of South Africa "has appeared since that contributed by Dr. Pappe and the Hon. R. W. Rawson to the Cape Monthly Magazine in November and December 1857." One hundred and fifty-three varieties are enumerated, including fifty-one not mentioned by Pappe and Rawson, and it is suggested that the list is by no means complete, and that further discoveries had been made since "the foregoing list went to press."

The account of the Congress is rendered specially interesting by an important speech by Mr. Rhodes, who had been elected President of the League. In his opening address he summed up the Parliamentary position in the Cape Colony, and urged fidelity to the Progressive Party. He asserted that the "Mugwumps" in the Cape House of Assembly caused the war, as, by their voting against the Redistribution Bill, they wrecked it, and in consequence the Progressives were defeated at the general election, and he observed that "if there had been a Progressive Party in a majority in the Cape Colony, with the feeling in Natal and Rhodesia, Kruger would never have dared to have thrown the gauntlet to Her Majesty's Government." Mr. Rhodes remarked, "We have not been fighting the Dutch. . . . We have been fighting Krugerism." He related a conversation he had had with Mr. Leyds at the opening of the Bloemfontein railway, when the Transvaal Secretary of State observed, "I assure you, Mr. Rhodes, we have no power whatever. The Government of the Transvaal is Kruger, and Kruger alone."

Bound up with this report is an extract from the Diamond Fields Advertiser giving Mr. Chamberlain's despatch to the Governor of the Cape Colony, dated July 2, 1902, in which, after reviewing the arguments of the petitioners in favour of the suspension of the Constitution, he refuses the sanction of the British Government to their proposals.

- *(SOUTH AFRICAN LEAGUE BANQUET): The League and its Work. Reprint from the "Diamond Fields Advertiser" (Kimberley). 10 pp. 8vo. 1899.

The speeches of Mr. F. Edmund Garrett, M.L.A., and Colonel (now Sir Edward) Brabant, C.M.G., M.L.A., were vigorous and to the point, in support of the progressive party of the Cape Colony, and the latter speaker remarked that he was "astonished that men of the reputation of Mr. Schreiner and Mr. (now Sir Richard) Solomon suffered themselves to be associated with" Mr. Sauer. Reference was made to a speech of Mr. Charles Molteno, who, in referring to the Schreiner ministry, congratulated his audience on "having helped to put and keep in power a Government that, if there were trouble between the Imperial Government and the Transvaal, would say to the Imperial Government, 'Pas op' (look out)."

"This," Mr. Garrett observed, "was very amusing, but it had a serious side too."

Vol. I. vi + 790 pp.

Vol. II. Pp. 764.

Vol. III. iv + 802 pp. 8vo. 1867-1869.

This interesting periodical was discontinued after an existence of three years, the publisher stating in a note at the end of the last number of the third volume, that "the cost of its production has left no profit that could be divisible among contributors, and it is extremely difficult to sustain the interest of writers . . . without some acknowledgment of services rendered. During the past year, the magazine has been under the guidance of three editors in succession, all of whom have left the Colony, and the publisher has not been able to make arrangements for its future literary conduct. . . ."

The first volume contains "The History of the Cape Colony," by A. Wilmot, in twelve chapters, a series of articles which formed the basis of the well-known history published in the year 1869. The same author also contributed an article on "Diamonds," with particulars respecting the South African Diamond Fields, which, at this period, were limited to the discoveries on the banks of the Vaal River. Other interesting items include a paper on the "Geology of the Diamondiferous Tract of South Africa," by Dr. John Shaw; a chapter entitled "Our Gold Fields," by the well-known traveller, James Chapman; and several poems from the pen of Mr. A. W. Cole, who subsequently became a Judge of the "High Court of Griqualand West."

The author asks in the Introduction, "Was there a conspiracy, and if so, with what object?" He refers frequently to Van Oordt's "Paul Kruger and the Rise of the South African Republic," with the object of proving that without "a carefully printed programme with chapter and verse," such a scheme existed, and he remarks, "We shall produce such documents and such quotations as must remove all doubt, must indeed, if their meaning be rightly grasped, reveal the scheme of the crafty conspirators against our Queen and Flag. . . ." Much of the paper is devoted to an account of the charges against Paul Kruger with regard to the treatment of the Uitlanders and his misuse of the Secret Service Fund. It is asserted that the President was interested with Nelmapius, and it is remarked that "So unique was the system of swindle between Kruger and Nelmapius that the former, upon hearing that the latter had been sentenced by the Bench to imprisonment 'for fraud,' sent an escort in hot haste to remove Nelmapius from the Pretoria Gaol, overruling thereby the highest judicial power in the country. At 3 P.M. on the 4th of December, 1886, Judge Brand rushed into the parlour of the old Pretoria Club, and in an angry voice exclaimed, 'I have sent in my resignation to that damned old Kruger! What do you think he has done now? He has released Nelmapius from gaol.' We gathered round the irate gentleman and obtained particulars of the case, which went to show that Kruger feared personal exposure." Reference is made to certain seditious articles published in Onsland, "the Cape Town Bond organ published in the shadow of the Houses of Parliament," from which the following quotation is given: "Truly this is a critical moment in the existence of Afrikanerdom all over South Africa. Now or never! The iron is hot, and the time to strike is now. . . . In the past blood was thicker than water. The blood of the Voortrekker is the same as that of those who stayed behind." The pamphlet concludes with a translation of a poem published in the Volksstem on August 26, 1899, entitled "The last Day of the Britishers in South Africa."

The Press is charged with being, on the whole, unfair to the army during the war, with reference to:—

1. "The generally injudicious and unjust tone adopted towards the army.
2. "The evil effects on the nation of the ignorance and pessimistic exaggeration of the war correspondents.
3. "The evil resulting from the publication in the newspapers of private letters from officers and soldiers, and
4. "The defects of the customs and regulations controlling war correspondents in the field."

Examples of the abuse of the Press are brought forward, and it is suggested that only journals of the first order should be allowed to send war correspondents, from whom proofs of complete ability should be exacted.

The Afrikanders are entreated to assist in the work of bringing about peace, and are asked whether they think they would have more freedom under such men as Kruger, Leyds, and Reitz than under the British Flag. They are asked to consider how terrible a thing it was that Englishmen and Afrikanders were combining to utterly ruin the country, and were told that Paul Kruger's ambition had already ruined himself and the Dutch Republics, and that his guerilla tactics will ruin the Afrikanders. They are urged to "help to make a United South Africa, where there would be no question, Afrikaner or English, German or Dutch, but where all would be South Africans."

The remarkable volte-face exhibited in the last letter is in such sharp contrast to the former communications, that it almost throws a doubt on the bona fides of the entire series. It seems hardly credible that the author of the letter entitled "Boer Ignorance," dated October 14, 1899, could ever have penned the production published on February 20, 1901, even accepting his statement that he had "sense enough to accept the logic of facts." The writer's drastic recommendations for the treatment of his defeated countrymen do not seem to have commended themselves to either the victors or the vanquished, and his language "in calling on Mr. Kruger, C. Botha, and De Wet to stop this murderers' work and seize that double-tongued man Steyn, and to give him his deserts," is certainly in curious contrast to the sentiments displayed in his first letter. In one of the epistles the writer states that his native town was Colesberg, and the work is sometimes attributed to Mr. Christoffel Botha, sometime of Colesberg, who practised there as a solicitor.

Writing at the commencement of hostilities, the author was of opinion that "the campaign of the Boers in Natal was only a preliminary or necessary prelude to their main campaign in the Orange Free State." He believed that General Joubert was making strenuous efforts to reduce Ladysmith in order to obtain an additional line of communication between the north of the Orange Free State and Pretoria. In discussing the various routes to the capital of the Transvaal which might be selected by the British army, he characterises the approach via Kimberley and the valley of the Vaal as being insecure, "being threatened by the Orange Free State all along the whole of its right," and he considered that the best project was to cross the Orange River and advance through the centre of the Orange Free State.

It is stated in the Introduction that "Her Majesty's Government have announced that they desire the country to pay particular attention to the Blue Book on the grievances of the British subjects of the Transvaal (C. 9345)." The pamphlet enumerates the facts which moved Sir Alfred Milner to send the well-known despatch of May 4, 1899, to Mr. Chamberlain, which cable, together with the petition of the Uitlanders to the Queen, may be considered as potential factors in the controversy between the British Government and the South African Republic which culminated in the war. There is a synopsis of the history of the Boers, and some interesting information respecting the condition of the Uitlanders.

*(SOUTH AFRICAN WAR, 1899-1902): (BOERS & THE WAR): The Boers and the War, from the impartial foreigners' point of view. A history in brief (1652-1902), containing chapters on the cause and commencement of the war ; the gold discovery and the consequences it entailed ; question of intervention ; possible peace terms ; the women and children and the concentration camps, tent life, &c. ; enemies to peace. With further notes ; atrocity charges dealt with ; terms of peace ; surrender agreement, &c. Compiled principally from the writings of eminent Swiss and other European publicists. Collated, translated, and arranged by S. N. D. With confirmatory note by Sir Frederick R. St. John, K.C.M.G., late British Minister to Switzerland. London : Simpkin, Marshall, Hamilton, Kent & Co., Limited. Portsmouth : Charpentier & Co. xx+120 pp. 12mo. 1902.

The author expresses surprise that President Kruger could have been able to hold a white population so long in subjection, and he quotes from a letter from Sir Frederick R. St. John, in which the latter writes, "Never has an opinion by a pro-Boer been put forward in my presence which did not betray the most astonishing ignorance of the subject, and display all the prejudice which such ignorance engenders." In order to illustrate the views of a high official of the Transvaal on the native question, a quotation is given from the speech of the Procureur-General in the Volksraad in June 1899, when he remarked, "All sentences for murder are not infamous ; a man will be sentenced for six months in prison for having killed his black ; it is very evident that he is not for that to be deprived of his electoral rights." It is asserted that the Kroonstad Committee maintained that on two occasions Kruger would have made submission to the British, but that he was prevented by Steyn, who "demanded complete independence."

Printed and published by Frank Wilter, Vryheid, Transvaal Colony. 95 pp. Cr. 8vo. 1901.

by John Barter, Jun., London.) Simpkin, Marshall, Hamilton, Kent & Co., Ltd. London. 95 pp. 8vo. 1901.

The publishers maintain "that the contents of the book are a true and correct translation of all official telegrams and proclamations issued by the late Government of the South African Republic . . . during the War," and the first telegram announces that the Free State Commandoes occupied Van Reenen's Pass as early as October 3, 1899. With regard to the charges of the British against the Boers of having constantly abused the white flag, it is remarked of a certain incident that "our burghers, who will not understand that firing must cease when the white flag is raised, kept on shooting"; an admission which throws some light on a hotly contested point. Some wonderful statistics are given concerning the British and Boer casualties; for example, at Elandsplaagte, which has always been recognised as a British victory, Viljoen estimated the burgher loss at 50 and the British loss at 600. At Dundee we are stated to have left 350 unburied dead and 150 wounded. Regarding Colenso, Dr. Molengraaf telegraphed that, according to an English ambulance doctor, our casualties were 5070, and Botha says that 2000 (his estimate) is not exaggerated, and that 3000 did not answer to the roll-call. The most astonishing statements appear to have been made to put heart into the burghers. On March 6, 1900, after Cronje's surrender, the Boer Government announced "there are no reasons for anxiety," and on June 3rd, when our troops had entered Johannesburg, they reported, "The general situation may be called satisfactory. The great English army now occupying the Witwatersrand is being more and more hemmed in by the federate burgher troops," &c., while at Machadodorp, only a few days before the Boer army was driven into Portuguese territory, they actually stated that, "owing to the good work thus effected by our Commandoes, the strength of the enemy is pretty well shattered."

Roy. 8vo. 1902.

The experiences of an officer employed in the administration of a fictitious but probably "typical Dutch town" in the Transvaal during the South African War. Amongst other duties, the author had to supervise the carrying out of the following measures in the town and district:—

1. The appointment of officials.
2. Formation of a police force (Kaffir and Dutch).
3. Organisation of a system of supplies.
4. Feeding of the destitute.
5. Introduction of an embryo English municipal system.
6. Formation of a vigilance committee.
7. Establishment of a mail service.

Captain X appears to have acquired a close knowledge of the Boers, with whom, according to the narrative, he is represented to have been in constant touch, and he observes that. "while there was much of the gentleman in the Boer man, there was little, if anything, of the lady about the Boer woman."

The Commission sat 55 days to take evidence, and heard 114 witnesses, who answered 22,200 questions.

*(SOUTH AFRICAN WAR, 1899-1902): (CONDUCT—BOER WAR): The Truth about the Conduct of the Boer War. Concentration Camps. Extracts from the Blue Book. The British Soldier as he is. Published by The Patriotic Association and Messrs. Simpkin, Marshall, Hamilton, Kent & Co., Ltd. London. 32 pp. 8vo. (1901.)

This pamphlet examines the "charges against the British soldier" during the war, and it is stated that "there is no single proved case of misconduct on the part of a British soldier against any Boer man, woman, or child," whilst quotations are given from various sources, many of them continental, which serve to illustrate the "excessive clemency practised by the soldiers of Great Britain," and the "provocations" they were exposed to by the Boer methods of warfare. Much censure is bestowed upon the "traitors and libellers" at home, and there is an extract from a letter from Lord Salisbury, dated November 16, 1901, in which he remarks, "England is, I believe, the only country in which, during a great war, eminent men will write and speak publicly as if they belonged to the enemy." The work deprecates "the most grotesque reports . . . circulated about the concentration camps by Miss Hobhouse and others," and gives extracts from the reports of Dr. Kendal Franks and other professional men regarding the uncleanly habits, laziness, and negligence of the Boers whilst in the camps.

There were six platforms at the meeting, and amongst the speakers were Mr. H. M. Hyndman, Mr. Frank Watkins (a former member of the Volksraad of the South African Republic), Mr. Felix Moscheles, Dr. G. B. Clarke, M.P., Mr. Thomas Wright, the Rev. J. Clifford, and many leading Radicals and Socialists. The resolution, which was submitted simultaneously from all the platforms, was to the effect that the disputes with the Transvaal could be settled by arbitration, and that the meeting denounced "the spirit of unscrupulous imperialism, grasping capitalism, and aggressive militarism which is leading us to the verge of war with the Transvaal Republic."

A review of General De Negrier's article published in the Revue des deux Mondes, entitled "Lessons of the South African War." Among the points emphasised are:—

- (a) That "when the war began, the English were versed only in frontal attacks";
- (b) "That not thirty to one massed men advancing directly against a properly prepared position held by good shots and good infantry would carry it";
- (c) That "the new repeating rifle with smokeless powder in the hands of a cool marksman displayed a power that had never till then been suspected."

The writer remarks that General De Negrier's conclusions are arrived at "wholly without prejudice," and are "throughout, the studies of an able and thoroughly-trained soldier."

An interesting synopsis of the Anglo-Boer Dispute and the subsequent South African War. The four preliminary chapters deal with "what preceded the Ultimatum," and the history of the political and military conflict is brought down to the signing of Peace at Vereeniging. The volume is well printed and illustrated, and there is a Preface from the pen of W. F. Andriessen.

- *(SOUTH AFRICAN WAR, 1899-1902): (GERMAN ANGLO-PHOBIA): Anglophobia in Germany. Ex. "The Contemporary Review," No. 433, pp. 13-22. By "Patriæ quis exul." Roy. 8vo. 1902.

The article discusses the violent hatred shown to England by Germany, and the various causes and reasons which existed for this outbreak. The South African War, it is maintained, had undoubtedly much to do with the anti-British feeling, but it was by no means altogether responsible for it. "There was little sympathy for the Boers; it was schadenfreude—malicious delight—in anticipation of disasters" to the British. Other causes of the antipathy are put down to the "dislike of the individual Englishman and his country's policy," to the commercial and political rivalry and envy, to the insularity, self-reliance, self-complacency, and aggressive personality of the Englishman, whose "breeziness" is "intolerable to the German." Allusion is made to old slights still rankling and treasured up, and it is observed that the "war cry 'made in Germany' stabbed the German to the quick." The writer asserts that "the Germans are hostile, increasingly so: and they believe we are degenerating. Let us not—spreta conscientia—pass on unmindful. Let us strengthen our fleet. It behoves us to be ready."

A curious little reminiscence of the South African War, 1899-1902. The contents are cheery and humorous, and there is a graphic description of one of the Boer "train-wrecking" feats, written by Sister Borlace, A.N.S.R., who was travelling on board the destroyed train.

Some rather amusing tales are related, amongst which is "a good, but very irreverent story. 'Said one of our men to a Boer prisoner: 'Now look here, sonny; don't you think that the game is about up?' " "Oh no," replied the Boer, "the Lord is on our side." "Ah, really," was the irreverent rejoinder. "But have you seen General French's staff; w'y, 'e's got five blooming lords on 'is staff!'"

The synopsis of the report deals with "the neglected warnings," and "how the Cabinet did not prepare" for war; "the unready Army," the "result of delay," and "the re-organisation in the face of the enemy." It is asserted that "the true measures of reform" are, the appointment of "an expert Minister of War," instead of a politician, and the organisation of a General Staff in close relation to the actual army, and it is maintained that the nation possesses "the capable expert" in the person of Lord Kitchener.

The extensive ramifications of the sub-committees enabled the society to render assistance to soldiers in many distant parts of the Cape Colony. The volume gives much information respecting the proceedings, which were brought to a close on July 10, 1902, and a number of interesting illustrations accompany the report, which is signed by John Fairbairn, the secretary.

English Prisoners at Pretoria.

Stampede of Artillery Mules at Ladysmith.

Battle of Modder River.

Death of General Symons.

This little work contains much useful information respecting the South African War, and the points in dispute between the Boers and the British. The notes on the Transvaal are of special value, explaining many subjects on which there has been much discussion.

*(SOUTH AFRICAN WAR, 1899-1902): (HARTS MILITIA): The Hart. Regimental Paper of the Harts Militia, 4th Batt. Bedfordshire Regiment.

The publication contains "The embodiment of the Harts Militia in 1900, and service in South Africa," by James Richardson, including the roll-call of officers and men, with details respecting each individual, and account of the services of the battalion up to the end of the year 1900. Only the above two numbers of The Hart were published.

It was stated that the publication would be completed in about twelve parts, but of these only four appear to have been issued; these contain biographical notes, with portraits, of officers serving in the South African War (1899-1902).

- *(SOUTH AFRICAN WAR, 1899-1902): ("HOLLANDER"): Voor den Oorlog met Engeland. Een gesprek tusschen acht Transvaalsche Boeren. Naverteld door een Hollander. Oostwoolde (Oldambt): Z. J. Koning cz. 8vo. 1899.

- *(SOUTH AFRICAN WAR, 1899-1902): ("HOLLANDIA," 1899): Hollandia: A Weekly Paper for Dutchmen Abroad. Special Transvaal Number. Written and edited by L. Simons. Published at The Hague, by the Uitgevers-Maatschappij "Nederland," . . . The Hague, and printed by Messrs. Binger Bros., Warmoesstraat, Amsterdam. 16 pp. Quarto. 1899.

The editor, addressing the "English reader," states that this extra number of the paper devoted to the Transvaal case is published in English, in order that it should be read by English men and women, and he asserts that if they "really knew and had heard a full statement of the case from the other side, the calamity that is threatening would be averted." There is a cartoon entitled "The most reasonable Man in the World. . . . The up-to-date John Grab of Stock Exchange, Music-Hall, and Leader Writer Ideal," and following this is an article setting forth "the Case for the Transvaal, from the Hollander point of view." There is also a discussion on the "broken pledge" of the Transvaal Government, with reference to the political rights of the Uitlanders, the writer maintaining that the case against the Boers was weak, and that the British had "allowed the Transvaal Government to alter the incidents of naturalisation several times since 1884 without raising the slightest objection."

- *(SOUTH AFRICAN WAR, 1899-1902): ("HOLLANDIA," 1900): Hollandia: A weekly Paper for the Dutch-speaking World at large. Special American-South-African Number. Written in English by L. Simons. Published at The Hague, by the Uitgevers-Maatschappij "Nederland," P. A. Nierstrasz, Managing Director. 16 pp. Quarto. 1900.

The writer, in appealing to the American people to assist the cause of the Boers, asks, "Has America already forgotten the story of her own struggle with the same enemy?" and he alludes to the "herdsmen of South Africa who are fighting the battle of freedom against the overbearing Briton." He compares the destruction of the independence of the Republics to the extinction of the Kingdom of Poland, the only similar incident of the nineteenth century. There are a number of cartoons and articles deprecating the British attitude and policy, and indicating, inter alia, "what America can do."

- *(SOUTH AFRICAN WAR, 1899-1902): (ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS): "The Illustrated London News" Record of the Transvaal War, 1899-1900. Amongst the photogravures are "Mafeking" and "Paardeberg," by Caton Woodville, and there is a spirited illustration of the charge of the 5th Lancers at Elandslaagte, by H. W. Koekkoek. A feature of the volume is the collection of the portraits of the chief contributors, literary and artistic, and this copy (No. 374) possesses the autographs of Caton Woodville, Melton Prior, and the editor, Mr. Ingram.

*(SOUTH AFRICAN WAR, 1899-1902): (IMPERIAL LIBERAL COUNCIL): The War; its Causes and Objects. A Brief Survey for Liberal Leaders. Printed by Field, Pearson & Co. . . . London. 15 pp. 8vo. (1900.)

It is stated that the "Imperial Liberal Council is an Association of Liberals who are desirous of promoting the large and efficient development of the British Commonwealth on Liberal lines. . . ." The pamphlet discusses the causes of the war from the Liberal Imperialist point of view, and it is observed that the war, "though deplorable as all war must be, is yet in its main political aspects both just and necessary. The very existence of our Empire was at stake, and therewith those great and cardinal principles of Liberalism which that Empire represents among the nations of the world."

It is stated that "at the outbreak of the Anglo-Boer War in October 1899, the vast majority of the Jewish population of the Transvaal were expelled by the Boer authorities, and a large number took refuge in Cape Town." The pamphlet gives an account of certain religious services held by the refugees, and a "New Year Eve Address," &c., by Dr. J. H. Hertz.

Fifteen Months in a Concentration Camp. Reminiscences of a Boer woman, during her captivity. The proceeds of the work to be devoted to the assistance of the Boer orphans.

It is stated that this narrative is founded on facts, the incidents having occurred to people whose names and condition are known. There is a description of the looting of a farm, under the orders of a British officer, who is accused of having taken part of the spoil himself. The author observes that "if the recital of the wrongs endured will lead to the protection in future of women and children in time of war, and to the disuse of such unmanly methods, they will not have suffered in vain."

The volume is one of the bitterest and most malignant of the Dutch anti-British publications at this period, and it contains thirty highly-coloured illustrations, all of which are of an extremely offensive nature *(SOUTH AFRICAN WAR, 1899-1902): ("LA CARICATURE"): "La Caricature." Paris. Folio. 1899-1900.

A collection of issues of this paper having coloured cartoons relating to the South African War and Question. The first specimen is by Amaral, and is the obscene production entitled "English Correction"—"Et dire que ca s'appelle Victoria." There are many offensive caricatures in the volume, which includes coloured sketches by Amaral, Grellet, Mignot, Jean D'Aurian, and Keronec'h, and there are a number of black and white drawings by no means inferior in insolence and maliciousness to the coloured illustrations.

(SOUTH AFRICAN WAR, 1899-1902): (LANCASHIRE FUSILIERS): A Militia Unit in the Field, being a brief account of the doings of the Sixth Battalion Lancashire Fusiliers in the South African War during the years 1900 and 1901. This issue contains a double-sheet cartoon depicting certain contractors of food and other supplies for the war, wearing badges with Pro-Boer notices, being paid by Mr. Chamberlain. A long line of waggons is taking the supplies to a steamer labelled South Africa, while a crowded populace surrounding the docks are exhibiting banners in support of the Boers and their generals. The cartoon is entitled "La Bande Internationale de Capitalistes."

- *(SOUTH AFRICAN WAR, 1899-1902): (LEIDEN Z.A. ALBUM): Leiden-Zuid-Afrika Album. Leiden: Edouard Ijdo. (No Pagination.) Folio. 1899.

- *(SOUTH AFRICAN WAR, 1899-1902): (LE RIRE): (Various Issues.) Quarto. 1899-1902.

A collection of issues of Le Rire containing caricatures on the South African War and the Anglo-Boer Question. Many of the cartoons are coloured, but amongst the black and white illustrations is one depicting Queen Victoria skipping under a scaffold, beneath which is a coffin bearing the inscription, "Louise Masset." This woman was found guilty of murder, about this time, in London; she had killed her child under peculiarly revolting circumstances, but being a Frenchwoman, and the Continental campaign against everything British being in full swing at this period, it was thought fit by the publishers of the journal to perpetuate the incident along with other "British atrocities."

This volume also contains Ad. Willette's "V'la les English."

- *(SOUTH AFRICAN WAR, 1899-1902): (LE RIRE--WILLETTE): V'la les English. Par Ad. Willette, Numéro spécial publié par "Le Rire." No. 264. 6 année. Paris 32 pp. Quarto. 1899.

The frontispiece of this special number depicts the burning of Joan of Arc, and is followed (inter alia) by a double-sized coloured sheet which represents a kind of procession led by Salvation Army girls, who are accompanied by half-nude chorus girls, and a Scotch soldier carrying the Union Jack, on which is inscribed "Jeanne d'Arc, Quiberon, Copenhagen, Napoleon, Cettivayo, Le Prince Imperial, Riel, Transvaal." These are accompanied by a clergyman with a pile of Bibles, supported by boxes of gunpowder, John Bull with his money-bag and gun, and a skeleton representing the plague, whilst the background is embellished with scaffolds with corpses depending from them. Many of the sketches are too foul to admit of any description, and the last sheet of the special number depicts the muse of history seated, holding a book inscribed "Histoire d'Angleterre, merde," Cambronne writing the last word with a dripping sword.

- *(SOUTH AFRICAN WAR, 1899-1902): ("LE RIRE BELGE"): Le Dégout. Numéro spécial dédié aux Gouvernements européens. Brussels. 16 pp. Quarto. 1900.

The frontispiece depicts the Emperor William II. of Germany, seated on his throne, dismissing President Kruger, Chamberlain appearing as a skeleton behind the throne, handing the monarch a dagger. Among other sketches is one representing the receptions of Kruger by President Loubet and the Queen of Holland, and a rather effective drawing by Steinlein, in which the Boer leader is seen with his arms full of floral tributes, and remarking sadly, "Trop de fleurs."

There is a grotesque cartoon of Chamberlain, as he is supposed to have appeared on receiving the news that the German Emperor had decided not to grant an interview to the Boer President.

- *(SOUTH AFRICAN WAR, 1899-1902): ("LIBERAL IMPERIALIST"): John Bull's Guinea-Pigs; or the World and the War.

By a true Liberal Imperialist. London: C. W. Bradley & Co.
 . . . 51 pp. 8vo. (1900)?

The author attempts to "briefly outline the behaviour of France, Germany, Holland, Russia, and the United States of America" to Great Britain during the South African War, and asserts that there has been "a growing feeling lately among thoughtful men . . . that England is gradually, but none the less surely, being forced by enterprising rivals into taking a less prominent position among the powers than she formerly occupied." There are some remarks on "the future of the British Empire," the author concluding by recommending the British to shake off their apathy, and show the world that "Englishmen are still men."

*(SOUTH AFRICAN WAR, 1899-1902): (LIBERAL LEADERS):
 Liberal Leaders on the War and the Settlement in South Africa.
 Issued by the Imperial South African Association. Westminster
 (London). 16 pp. 8vo. (1902).

Extracts from the speeches of Sir H. Campbell-Bannerman, the Right Hon. H. H. Asquith, the Right Hon. Sir Henry Fowler, Sir Edward Grey, Mr. R. B. Haldane, and Mr. Perks. There is some reference to the "reckless language of Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman" as compared with the utterances of the other Liberal leaders.

*(SOUTH AFRICAN WAR, 1899-1902): (LLOYD'S PATRIOTIC FUND):
 A Century of Lloyd's Patriotic Fund. 1803-1903.
 London: Printed at the Leadenhall Press, Ltd. . . . 61 pp. Cr.
 8vo. 1903.

The portion of the publication dealing with South Africa extends to fifteen pages, and it is stated that "although the war broke out in October 1899, it was naturally some months before calls were made on the funds." In the meantime the Lord Mayor had opened a subscription list at the Mansion House, which was liberally responded to, and that portion of the funds "intended for disabled men after their discharge was assigned to . . . Lloyd's Patriotic Fund, and finally amounted to £112,000. Direct subscriptions . . . brought this sum up to £124,000." The pamphlet gives particulars of the various methods pursued to assist the disabled soldiers after their return home, and it is observed that "early in the war it became evident . . . that officers also would require pecuniary assistance," and it was resolved that they should be considered eligible. The efforts of the trustees were materially assisted by the generosity of two ladies, who, "with great public spirit, converted their fine mansion into a hospital for the reception of officers, while noblemen and other gentlemen in the country provided them with convalescent homes."

*(SOUTH AFRICAN WAR, 1899-1902): ("L'ONCLE PAUL"):

 Paris. 16 pp. Quarto. 1900.

Adventures of two little Boer children, related by Uncle Paul to little French children. Jacques de la Voie, Interpreter. Illustrated by S. Pestillac.

A little book of coloured sketches evidently designed to awaken the interest of French children in the cause of the Boers. There is a full-page portrait of Paul Kruger, who is designated as the "Apostle of Liberty and Justice."

- *(SOUTH AFRICAN WAR, 1899-1902): ("LONG TOM"): How Thady Maloney bate the Boers. By Long Tom. (No Printer's or Publisher's name or address, and no date.) (Cape Town.) 12pp. 8vo. (1899)?

A little skit on Paul Kruger and the Transvaal.

- *(SOUTH AFRICAN WAR, 1899-1902): ("LUSTIGE BLÄTTER" CARICATURES): ("Lustige Blätter"). (Caricatures on the South African War.) Berlin. Quarto. 1899-1901.

A collection of coloured cartoons and black and white sketches on the South African War, published from time to time in this celebrated German comic paper. The sketches are in many cases beyond the limits of decent caricature, especially the drawing entitled "Die Schule des Sieges" (No. 8, 1900), which depicts a Boer woman seized by two Kaffirs at the command of a British soldier. In No. 50 (1901) there is a coloured sketch representing Chamberlain, Salisbury, Rhodes, Kitchener, and Broderick in a barbed wire enclosure, surrounded by Boer and European bystanders, the cartoon being entitled "Also a concentration camp, upon whose inmates is concentrated the condemnation of the whole world."

- *(SOUTH AFRICAN WAR, 1899-1902): (LUTTE HÉROÏQUE): La Lutte Héroïque des Boers du Transvaal. Anglais contre Boers. Grand Roman Historique embrassant la période 1815 a 1900. Par R. V., auteur de "Robert et Bertrand." Éditeur, J. Hoste . . . Bruxelles. 2 vols. 2288 pp. Folio. 1900-2.

The heroic struggle of the Transvaal Boers. English versus Boers. A great historical romance, embracing the period 1815-1900. By R. V., author of "Robert and Bertrand."

This huge work consists almost entirely of an account of the South African War, 1899-1902, illustrated by an immense quantity of badly printed engravings on paper of a very inferior quality. The work was issued in 143 parts, the last of which was published on October 2, 1902.

- *(SOUTH AFRICAN WAR, 1899-1902): MENTIONED IN DESPATCHES): Mentioned in Despatches. South African War, 1899-1902. The reticence of the Government with respect to war news is discussed, and it is hinted that the ministry are not pressing the campaign with the necessary vigour. It is observed that "what the Unionists and Conservatives cannot do away with is cowardice on the part of the men whom they have placed in power, hesitation to use the strength of the nation, and truckling to a foolish, misguided, and most mischievous minority."

The pamphlet strongly criticises the neglect of Sir William Butler's warnings, and the scant attention paid to the report of the Intelligence Division (September 21, 1898) respecting the preparations of the Boers for war. A few general facts are given "showing the costly nature of the hostilities, with regard to loss of men, animals, and money," &c., together with reference to the Royal Commission appointed to inquire into the conduct of the war. Special note is taken of the deficiencies in warlike stores and the insufficient or useless equipments provided, and Sir George Taubman-Goldie is quoted as having said that "only an extraordinary combination of fortunate circumstances, external and internal, saved the Empire during the early months of 1900."

The committee represented people in the highest position in rank, religion, and art, and the publication contains a number of photographs of patrons of the bazaar, which form an interesting collection of contemporary portraits of well-known people in Great Britain in the first year of the twentieth century, and a memento of an anxious and strenuous period in the history of the country.

*(SOUTH AFRICAN WAR, 1899-1902): (NATIONAL PROTEST): National Protest against the African War. Supplement to "War against War in South Africa." Printed by W. Speaight & Sons for W. T. Stead (London). 4 pp. Folio. 1900.

The so-called "National" Protest was held "in one of the rooms" in Exeter Hall; the room is stated to have been "crowded to the utmost, scores being turned away," but no estimate of the number present is given. The chairman was a Mr. Silas Hocking, and amongst those present were Mr. W. S. Stead, Mr. Passmore Edwards, and Sir Edmund Verney. In the course of Mr. Stead's speech he advocated the "dismissal" of Mr. Chamberlain, and asserted that Kimberley and Ladysmith would fall, a prediction received by the audience with cries of "Hear, hear!"

Information Commission, from the Commencement of Hostilities up to the occupation of Bloemfontein by the British, and some other interesting Extracts. F. C. Hundermark, Printer, Jagersfontein. 116 pp. 12mo. 1900.

The information afforded is interesting, as showing the methods adopted by the Boer Generals to keep up the war spirit among the Burghers; in almost every instance the losses of the Republicans are minimised, whilst the British are accused of abusing the white flag, and firing on ambulances, &c. &c. The telegrams describe Boer victories with much detail and considerable religious fervour, but their reverses, if mentioned at all, are passed over with few particulars and little comment.

Scenes in the South African War, 1899-1902, described by extracts from letters sent by officers and privates to relations and newspapers. It is stated in the Preface that the censorship rendered the telegrams sent by the war correspondents in such a manner that there was a grave perversion of the truth, and an example is printed of an original message, with its censored edition by its side. It is stated that with regard to this telegram, "The art of elision . . . transferred (a) captured maxim from the Boers to the English, and converted 180 English prisoners sent to Pretoria into 180 Boers killed."

BRITISH MUSEUM LIBRARY.

An attack on the British army with regard to "the treatment of prisoners, of wounded, of those who surrendered, of the so-called rebels, the burning of farms without strategical necessity, the abuse of the white flag, the engaging of Kaffirs as military men," &c. &c. Some of these accusations purport to be supported by affidavits made before Justices of the Peace, and one of them, referring to General Kock, states that the Commandant was wounded at Elandslaagte by a dum-dum bullet, and subsequently robbed by a British soldier, and that his treatment by the Hospital authorities left much to be desired. Many instances are given of the alleged brutalities of British soldiers, some of which were published in the Daily News and the Daily Chronicle, and others in Continental papers. It is stated that "the people of Holland, still stunned by the war which the actual British Government so insolently and recklessly has dared to provoke in South Africa . . . protests with indignation against those acts perpetrated by disbanded soldiers, and not disavowed by the British Government."

The articles in this volume (according to the Preface—signed E. D.) first appeared in the Signal. The various reports on railway operations in connection with the South African War formed originally a compilation extending to four volumes, only one of which was printed by the Treasury, who decided, from motives of economy, not to issue the last three volumes. The Royal Engineers Institute then took up the work, under sanction of the Treasury, and published—in an abbreviated form—the three last portions in these two volumes. volume of the original is referred to . . . as the 'Director of Railways' General Report.'" A list of the original authors will be found in the Addenda.

They were written "for the use of a friend going to the front, who . . . was not acquainted with the special features and peculiarities" of the South African Veld. A list is given of South African expressions with their English equivalents, together with many valuable hints regarding scouting and reconnoitring, and other matters respecting military life on the Veld.

A sensational communication from South Africa. Revealing facts which indicate the real state of affairs there.

A somewhat heated brochure, which, inter alia, accuses Sir Alfred Milner of falsifying certain despatches, and enumerates certain charges made by General Joubert against the British army. There is a diary of the war from October 11 to November 16, 1899.

- *(SOUTH AFRICAN WAR, 1899-1902): (SETTLEMENT—S.A.): The Settlement of South Africa. Ex. "Quarterly Review," No. 385, Vol. 193, pp. 224-257. London: John Murray. . . . 8vo. 1901.

The article is divided into two sections, i.e. (1) "State Finance and Industrial Enterprises," and (2) "Immigration, Agriculture, and Irrigation," the first article discussing the question whether the war was "undertaken to defend Imperial or Local interests." The second paper advocates the principle of immigration for South Africa as a whole, the author observing that a well-carried out immigration scheme would best preserve the British flag in South Africa. "Afrikanderism can last only by preserving its isolation."

"were hedged round with red tape it is marvellous what they were able to achieve." The author's services extended to Natal, the Free State, and the Transvaal, and a curious, if not altogether a pleasant, light is thrown upon the difficulties encountered by nursing sisters during the campaign.

It is stated that the pamphlet was published "In view of the extreme ignorance which prevails among a large section of the community, and the opportunity which this offers to the disseminating of false views of the Boers by ill-informed and sometimes unscrupulous writers." Extracts are given from letters and statements of some eminent statesmen connected with South Africa, upon the character of the Boers, and amongst these, Sir B. D'Urban is quoted as characterising them as a "brave, patient, industrious, orderly, and religious people, the cultivators, the defenders, and the tax contributors of the country."

A chronological list of occurrences is given from May 31, 1899, to October 11, 1899, when the Boer forces crossed the frontier. In the Recapitulation, it is sought to prove that the Transvaal "made concessions on four points; with conditions on two points (one of which withdrawn), and proposed Arbitration," while "British Government concedes no point; makes demands successively on four points; suggests Conference on outstanding questions, but declines Arbitration."

- The pamphlet, which is printed in English and Dutch, supports "absolute equality between the races" after the war, "by making it a fundamental rule that the man of British race shall have equal right with the Dutch and no more, and that the idea of ascendancy for either shall be banished from South Africa." It is argued that "if the Orange Free State and the Transvaal could be towed into the Indian Ocean, no one could possibly object to their independence, but to give them independence, situated as they are in the middle of South Africa, would now be the most monstrous act of political levity. It must mean yet another and equally bloody war in the course of the next few years. . . . They must come within the Empire, but they must also be endowed . . . with the fullest rights of self-government known to the Empire. . . . We cannot give them more than Colonial Rights without imperilling the peace of all South Africa."

A description of a journey from Klerksdorp to Pretoria during the latter stages of the war. The writer, remarking on the condition of the country at this period, asserts that between Klerksdorp and Wolmaranstad, "every farmhouse we passed was in the same condition, roofless, windowless, dams broken, water furrows choked, and orchards devastated." The people, however, were already being resettled, and "were on the whole good-humoured, patient, and uncomplaining. . . . Fairly considered, this repatriation is a hard nut for the proud, indolent Boer, for it means the reversal of a life's order. His bywoners are scattered, his native boys refuse to return to him; there is nothing for the poor man to do but to take pick and hammer himself."

The chair was taken by Mr. George W. E. Russell, who observed that they had been told "that this meeting was out of date, and that by the time it was held all danger of war would be over"; he was not, however, confident that the prediction could be reckoned on. Dr. G. B. Clark, M.P., made a long speech, in the course of which he explained away the grievances of the Outlanders, the existence of which he did not altogether deny; he asserted, however, that people had grievances all over the world, and there was no necessity to go to war with the Transvaal, because the system of government in that country was not perfect. Subsequently, Mr. Molteno made a temperate speech, asserting that Messrs. Fischer, Hofmeyr, and Schreiner (W. P.), "stand comparison in patriotism, in patience, and in high-mindedness with any public men in any country in the world."

Printed by Hudson & Kearns . . . Published by Geo. Newnes, Ltd. . . . (London). 268 pp. Folio. 1900.

*(SOUTH AFRICAN WAR, 1899-1902): ("ULK" CARICATURES): Caricatures on the South African War and the Transvaal Question, &c. Berlin. Quarto. 1896-1902.

A collection of coloured cartoons from the well-known German periodical Ulk, from the time of the Jameson Raid to the latter stages of the South African War. One of the cartoons depicts Kitchener and Chamberlain as two demons, Kitchener being engaged in collecting the children of the Republics, and depositing them in a cauldron encircled with fire, while Chamberlain stirs the pot, and the children emerge as angels; this work of art is entitled "Wie die Teufel für den Himmel sorgen! zwölftausend Burenkinder!!" Another choice specimen is a production dated July 12, 1901, and entitled "Englische Helden," and represents a number of British soldiers clubbing a Boer woman and her children, and having murdered them, and set fire to the house, they are seen in another sketch sneaking off, scared by a little Boer boy shouting, "Vater kommt." The earliest sketch is dated January 24, 1896, and depicts Kruger whipping the British Lion (the Chartered Company) and a hyena (Dr. Jameson), while a rather humorous cartoon represents the old President at a telegraph office asking the official "Aus Berlin?" and receiving the answer "Nichts"; this caricature is dated November 3, 1899, and is entitled "Der Drach nach Pretoria."

A work containing a history of the war up to the time of Cronje's surrender and the occupation of Bloemfontein. The earlier chapters of the volume discuss "The origin of the Boer Republics, and the causes which led up to the war," and are followed by detailed accounts of "The Invasion of Cape Colony," the sieges of Kimberley and Ladysmith, and the relief of the beleaguered towns.

- *(SOUTH AFRICAN WAR, 1899-1902): (UNFOUNDED ATTACKS): Unfounded Attacks on British Officers, made in "An Absent-minded War," by a British Staff Officer. A refutation by XXX. and LIV. London: Skeffington & Son. 104 pp. 12mo. 1901.

The author states that as he has had twenty-six years' experience "in a steady-going, old, untitled regiment, and also eight years more on the Staff," he might possibly be an older soldier than the "British Staff Officer" who wrote the book entitled "An Absent-minded War." It is asserted that the Intelligence Department gave correct information as to the fighting strength and armaments of the Boers, but their numbers were increased by about 15,000 foreigners. Previous to the war the advice of the Commander-in-Chief and other military experts was constantly rejected on the score of expense, and the Intelligence Department was run by Sir John Ardagh and twenty-five officers, while the same department in the German army was represented by no less than 260 men. The writer warmly defends the regimental and staff officers, and deprecates the attacks on the Intelligence and other departments of the War Office.

This album, published to assist the movement for collecting funds for poor Boer women and children, appeared with the issue of "De Vaan," published in January 1902, a copy of which is bound up in this volume. Most of the contributions are in the Dutch language, and take the form of signed letters, sketches, or music. Among the writers represented are Rodolph Muller, Dr. Blink, Mansfelt, Boissevain, and many others. Two English authors, viz., Miss Hobhouse and Mr. W. T. Stead, contribute their quota, whilst artistic drawings, one of which is from the pencil of Josef Israels, add to the attractions of the publication.

On the cover is a sketch showing Kruger and Chamberlain sitting amicably smoking together, taken from the New York periodical Life, and other illustrations depict an engagement between the Boers and the British at Ladysmith, scenes of gold and diamond mining from Johannesburg and Kimberley, portraits of Rhodes, Barnato, Kruger, Milner, Colley, Steyn, Joubert, Chamberlain, and the principal British Generals in South Africa at this period, together with a large map of the scene of war, &c. &c.

This book was written by a French officer serving with the Boers, and the Dutch and British combatants come in for severe criticism, quite impartially, while the author is very eloquent respecting the ingratitude of the Boers to the foreign volunteers. His narrative is highly interesting, but is spoilt by his cowardly proposition to poison all the wells along the line of retreat—a dastardly project which the Boer Commandant refused to entertain. Some of the spelling of the African names is very grotesque ; amongst these "Otto's Kopje," near Kimberley, figures as "Autoskopje."

3. The Congregational Union of Natal.
4. The Durban Church Council.
5. Maritzburg Church Council.
6. The Evangelical Church Council of Port Elizabeth and District.

8. The Evangelical Ministers of Kimberley.
9. The Lovedale Institution.
10. The Cape Town Presbytery of the Presbyterian Church.
11. The King William's Town Presbytery of the Presbyterian Church.
12. The Natal Presbytery of the Presbyterian Church.
13. The Adelaide Presbytery of the Presbyterian Church.
14. Presbytery of Kaffraria of the Free Church of Scotland.
15. The Kaffrarian Presbytery of the Presbyterian Church of South Africa.
16. The Cape of Good Hope Synod of Wesleyan Methodist Church of South Africa.
17. The Queenstown Synod (native) of the Wesleyan Methodist Church of South Africa.
18. The Ministers of the Baptist, Congregational, Lutheran, Presbyterian, and Wesleyan Churches of Cape Town and its vicinity.
19. Wesleyan Methodist Church of South Africa.

The main features expressed in the pronounced views of the various bodies are :—

1. Confidence in Sir Alfred Milner ; and
2. "The belief that the well-being of the whole of South Africa is dependent on the indisputable establishment of British supremacy and sovereignty."

The resolutions differ in the language made use of, the scope of the sentiments, and the points enumerated, but practically the whole of them agree in the two foregoing opinions.

The publication discusses the different points of the dispute between England and the Transvaal, "Jameson's abortive attempt," the first engagements, and "a good start for the Boers."

*(SOUTH AFRICAN WAR, 1899-1902): (WAR DESPACHES): The War Despatches. Ex. "Blackwood's Magazine," No. MXXV. pp. 404-411. Roy. 8vo. 1901.

Reference is made to the "indecision, vacillation, and despondency" exhibited in Sir Redvers Buller's communications, and to the statement of Lord Roberts that when he arrived in South Africa he found that "no organised transport corps existed."

*(SOUTH AFRICAN WAR, 1899-1902): (WAR—LESSONS): Ex. "Quarterly Review," vol. 195, No. 389, pp. 295-326. London: John Murray. . . . 8vo. 1902.

The writer sums up the position of the contest in South Africa, "taking stock of the progress made since the departure of Lord Roberts in November 1901 to the end of the year 1901." There is a résumé of the engagements during the period under review, and the author specially alludes to the evil effect of De Wet's invasion of the Cape Colony. He considered that a great mistake was made when Lord Kitchener opened peace negotiations with General Botha after a series of British reverses, and points out that "the best test of the generosity" of the terms then offered "is to be found in the alarm and dismay which their publication caused among the Uitlanders." It is asserted that Botha called upon the burghers to continue fighting till the opening of the British Parliament, "on the ground that the demand for future supplies would be refused, and the Government forced to make peace." Attention is drawn to the results of the policy of leniency to the Boer population and the Dutch of the Cape Colony, and it is stated that in the Cape Colony "treason has been made a venial offence, and the initial impression of weakness thus caused can never be effaced by belated measures of severity."

A vade-mecum of notes and hints to readers of despatches and intelligence from the seat of war, with a coloured war map, and a glossary of military technical terms, local, African, and Dutch phrases, &c. Also a supplementary chapter on the situation by Dr. G. M. Theal. T. Fisher Unwin. . . . London. 140 pp. 16mo. 1900.

The supplementary chapter is extracted from the fifth edition of Mr. Theal's "South Africa" (Story of the Nations series), and presents the position between Great Britain and the Transvaal just before the commencement of hostilities. The writer sums up the case for the Uitlanders and discusses the charges against the Boer Governments, but while expressing no opinion himself, and stating that "every reader must decide for himself as to the merits of respective cases," he really strips the whole question of the side issues, and practically admits that the Suzerainty of Great Britain over the Transvaal was at the root of the whole matter, and the decision with regard to it must sooner or later have resulted in arbitration or war.

V. The Real Motive for the War.

VI. Mr. Chamberlain and the Raid.

Published by the "Morning Leader," London. . . . 20 pp., and 8 leaflets. 8vo. (1899-1902.)

It is asserted that "the Boers had very nearly been caught napping at the beginning of the year 1896," and being "thoroughly convinced that the attempt would be renewed at some future date . . . were determined to be thoroughly on their guard the second time," and it is stated that they only armed "after the Jameson Raid had warned them that their independence was threatened." The treatment of the natives by the Boers is contrasted with their condition under the British in other parts of Africa, and it is contended that the position of the coloured races would not be improved by the substitution of British for Boer. Amongst the leaflets will be found what is termed the "Hawksley Dossier," containing correspondence between Mr. Hawksley, the solicitor to the Chartered Company, Government officials, and others, referring to the attitude of the Government, and of Mr. Chamberlain, and other prominent politicians, with reference to the Select Committee on the Jameson Raid.

A collection of quotations taken from the letters of British privates, together with carefully selected extracts from reports of special correspondents, all seeking to prove the brutality exhibited by the British soldiers to the Boers, and the spirit of revenge and hatred by which they were animated. On the other hand, a number of incidents are related illustrating the kindness of the Boers to British prisoners, and giving instances of the chivalry and honour displayed by the burghers. The author asserts that "our cause is an unrighteous one, and only indelible shame and disgrace can attach to England if we do not submit to arbitration."

The Communique from the Netherlands Government suggested that the British authorities should grant a safe-conduct to the Boer delegates in Holland to enable them to confer with the Boer leaders in South Africa. Lord Lansdowne, while expressing his appreciation of the motives inspiring the proposal of the Netherlands Government, declared that the British Government could not accept any intervention from any foreign power with respect to the South African War. He also pointed out that it was by no means certain that the delegates had any voice in the Councils of the South African Boers in the field.

The title is somewhat of a misnomer, the article dealing with the customs and position of the natives of Africa, and other coloured races, as a whole. It is stated that when the British took over the Cape of Good Hope they found only "the poor remnants of a barbarous tribe, reduced to the most abject state of servitude and degradation by the Dutch. . . ."

A sketch of the chief events in the Cape Colony, from the year 1815 up to the date of the publication of the volume. Reference is made to the Albany Settlers and to the hostilities with the natives, and it is observed, "It seems a fact which admits of no contradiction that the colony thrives by the necessary expenditure incurred in Kaffir wars, and that the natives are supplied by some of our own people with large quantities of the munitions of war." Allusion is made to the abandonment of the Orange River Sovereignty, and the recognition of the independence of the Boers who established the Transvaal Republic, and it is remarked, "It is to be feared, from statements received from several quarters, that these Boers carry on a system of kidnapping native children." It is stated that "it was thought not improbable that the Transvaal Republic and the Orange Free State would unite, and such a measure might perhaps be productive of good."

Livingstone," together with an account of "the labours of missionaries, traders, and the early travellers." Mr. Theal observes of this work ("History of South Africa, 1834-1854") that "The chapters relating to South Africa are chiefly composed of extracts from other works, many of which are trustworthy; but there are several misleading statements in the portions which appear to be original." There are a number of full-page coloured and black-and-white illustrations, including portraits of Stanley, Speke, and Grant.

*(SOUTHEY, Sir RICHARD): The Life and Times of Sir Richard Southey, K.C.M.G., &c. Formerly Colonial Secretary of the Cape Colony, and Lieut.-Governor of Griqualand West. By the Hon. Alex. Wilmot, Member of the Legislative Council of the Cape Colony, &c. Two photogravures and appendices. London: Sampson Low, Marston & Company, Lim. Cape Town, Paarl, Buluwayo, and Pretoria: T. Maskew Miller. xiv+439 pp. 8vo. 1904.

Richard Southey was born at Culmstock, a small town in Devonshire, on the 25th of April 1808, and was twelve years of age when he accompanied his father to South Africa as one of the 1820 settlers. The Southey party settled at Round Hill between Bathurst and Grahamstown, "and here young Richard joined in the pioneer farming efforts of his people, and acquired that love of sport which continued throughout his long career." After some experience as a clerk in Grahamstown, he went, at the age of twenty-one, on a trading and hunting expedition to Pondoland, which, however, was not a financial success, and returning, engaged himself in cattle dealing, and later on in farming operations together with his brothers. In 1834 a Kaffir war broke out, and Richard Southey became a lieutenant in the "Albany Mounted Sharpshooters"; he rose to the rank of Captain, and his services were highly prized by Colonel (afterwards Sir Harry) Smith, who commanded the British and Colonial troops. The chief Hintza had been placed in Southey's charge, but he attempted to escape, and was shot by the young Captain, an incident which created some sensation in England. The Southneys lost all their possessions in the war, but at the close of the hostilities in 1835, Richard Southey was appointed "Resident Agent and Justice of the Peace with certain of the Kaffir tribes . . . at Mount Coke," a post which he filled till the end of the year 1836, when, the office being abolished, he again engaged in mercantile and farming operations. In the year 1847 Sir Harry Smith was appointed Governor of the Cape, and he at once offered Southey the position of private secretary, which he accepted, and later on he accompanied the Governor to the Orange River Sovereignty. Here he was present at the battle of Boomplaats, and he was left by Sir Harry at Bloemfontein, "to collect the fines levied on the Boers," and the work contains a number of interesting letters covering the period of his residence in the Orange Free State. At the end of 1849 Mr. Southey was appointed Civil Commissioner and Resident Magistrate of Swellendam, and he rendered great assistance to the Governor during the Kaffir War 1850-1-2. At a later date, Mr. Southey acted as locum tenens for Mr. John Montagu, Colonial Secretary, who had obtained leave of absence, but a misunderstanding arose with the Lieut.-Governor, Mr. C. H. Darling, who suspended Southey, who lost no time in proceeding to England, where he laid an appeal before the Secretary of State for the Colonies. After some months' delay his suspension was reversed and orders were sent to the Governor of the Cape that he was to be reinstated, whereupon he returned to Cape Town, and subsequently was made Secretary to the Lieut.-Governor in Grahams-town. In 1860 the then Secretary to the Cape Government went to England on leave and Mr. Southey took his place, giving great satisfaction throughout the Colony, and on December 7, 1861, he was recommended for the post of Treasurer and Accountant-General of the Cape Colony, a position he filled till 1864. In that year, Mr. Rawson retiring, he received the permanent appointment of Colonial Secretary, which he retained till "the advent of responsible government required him to retire on a pension in 1872." During this latter period there are a number of important letters regarding the annexation of the Diamond Fields and the introduction of responsible government at the Cape, a step to which Mr. Southey was, at that time, opposed, his reasons being given in an important minute, parts of which are reproduced in the volume, which also contains a memorandum upon the claims of the Orange Free State to the Diamond Fields.

On his compulsory retirement from office, Mr. Southey was granted a pension of £1400 a year and made a C.M.G., receiving other marks of esteem from the inhabitants of the Cape. He was, however, too active and vigorous to be allowed to remain long out of harness, and he was requested by Sir Henry Barkly to undertake the government of the new province of Griqualand West, a delicate and difficult proposition, "the third form of administration that in about as many years had been tried in the vain hope of satisfying the turbulent white population." However, the new Governor set to work with his accustomed zeal, and was soon busied in inaugurating the constitution of the new Colony. There was great discontent among the diggers, who soon assumed a threatening attitude and commenced arming, while Mr. Southey discovered that he could not rely implicitly "on the loyal help of his whole Executive Council, or on the support of his Governor-in-chief." Matters came to a head and troops were sent to Kimberley, and on their arrival Mr. Southey published “an amnesty to all illegal bodies, with the exception of six leaders, on condition of the dissolution of the association, and the surrender of all illegally acquired arms and ammunition—terms which were readily accepted, . . . but Aylward, the fire-eater, sent a notice of his death to the paper, and hid himself. . . .” However, a scapegoat had to be found, and as “the promoters of the trouble were to go scot free, the only person left was the Lieutenant-Governor,” who was promptly superseded by Sir Henry Barkly, not indeed to his great sorrow. In 1876 Mr. Southey was elected member of the Legislative Assembly for Grahamstown, but retired from public life in 1878. He was knighted in 1891, and died ten years later, on July 22, 1901. Sir Richard Southey “was a typical colonist of the best class . . . a class of men, brave, patient, sagacious, and industrious, who have taken so great a part in the formation and consolidation of that Greater Britain which now forms an important part of the Empire. . . .”

The pamphlet is a new edition of the original, published in 1831, which was addressed to the flock-masters of Australia and Tasmania, and evidently the production of wool in South Africa must have considerably advanced in the nine years subsequent to the publication of the earlier edition. The author observes, “It has . . . been a source of gratification to me to notice the rapid progress made by the agriculturists of Southern Africa in the conditions of their wools; . . . I make no doubt that wool will ere long become a large and valuable export from that thriving Colony.”

By Thomas Southey. London: Published by Effingham Wilson . . . also by T. W. Saunders. . . . Leeds: Reid Newsome (late Baines & Newsome); and Glasgow: T. Murray & Son. iv + 93 pp. 8vo. 1851.

Inscription on title-page, “J. B. Heath, Esq., with the author’s best respects.”

Only about two pages of this volume are devoted to South Africa, the author observing that its pastoral capabilities had been deranged by the Kaffir War. The export of wool in the year 1849 from Cape Town and Port Elizabeth is stated to have been 5,024,946 pounds, but it is remarked that the wool was not clean enough, being mixed with sand. It is observed that the French manufacturers appreciated South African wool, but in order to suit their purposes "the raw material must be clean, and the staple about two inches. The British manufacturer is also a willing competitor for this class of wool, and when in good condition, its usual price being from fourteen to sixteen pence per pound."

The author states that "much misapprehension exists as to priority of discoveries in the dark Continent," and he gives some particulars respecting the proofs "that the vast territory which Portugal still holds on both coasts of Africa has been acquired by unassailably legitimate titles." There is a reproduction of a map entitled "L'Afrique" issued in 1775, by J. B. Nolin, and three early views of Mombassa, Quiloa, and Sofala, dated 1505.

towards the Antarctic Polar Circle, and round the world; but chiefly into the country of the Hottentots and Caffres, from the year 1772 to 1776.* By Andrew Sparrman, M.D., Professor of Physic at Stockholm, Fellow of the Royal Academy of Sciences in Sweden, and inspector of its Cabinet of Natural History. Translated from the Swedish original. With Plates. In two Volumes.
London: Printed for G. G. J. and J. Robinson. . . . Vol. I. xxviii + 368 pp.; Vol. II. viii + 350 pp. Quarto. 1785.

An enthusiast in the study of natural history from his youth, the author was overjoyed at being enabled to proceed to the Cape, through the influence of his friend Captain Ekeberg with the Royal Swedish East India Company. Sparrman's nominal position in the Colony was that of tutor to the children of Mr. M. Kerst, sub-governor of the Cape, but he was also appointed interpreter at False Bay, and received permission from Governor Van Plettenberg to practise as a doctor. He made several excursions into the country in search of natural history specimens, and he gives some valuable information respecting Cape Town and the neighbouring districts at this period. On his arrival at the Cape on January 10, 1772, he had only the small sum of twenty-five rix dollars in his possession, but the kindness of his reception, and the hospitality of the colonists, enabled him to pursue his researches, and his expenses on his short expeditions were defrayed by the Swedish East India Company. About the latter end of the year, the English Exploring Expedition under Captain Cook visited Table Bay, and Sparrman was invited to accompany it, and he sailed in the Resolution on November 22, 1772. He did not return to South Africa until March 1775, when he determined to make an expedition into the interior with a friend named Immelman, and they made a start on July 25th, the journey being extended to April 1776. They penetrated through Kaffraria as far as "Bruntjes Hoogte," and the narrative of their travels is interesting and instructive, and is described by Mr. Theal as the "most trustworthy account of the Cape Colony and the various races of people then residing in it" that had been published in the eighteenth century. The author relates many incidents illustrating the hospitality of the Dutch farmers and their dense ignorance of matters outside their own country, and he makes allusions to the cruelty of the treatment of the slaves by the lower classes of the colonists. He frequently draws attention to the inaccuracies to be met with in Kolbe's account of the Cape, and throws considerable doubt on the veracity of many of his statements. Sparrman died at Stockholm in 1820, at the age of seventy-three; his work, originally written in Swedish, was translated and published in French, English, and German, and went through several editions.

The historical journal of the voyage made from Zeeland to the East Indies with three ships under the direction of Commander Joris Van Spilbergen; his first voyage, in the years 1601, 1602, 1603, 1604. Likewise a description of the second voyage to the East Indies made with twelve ships under Admiral Steven van der Hagen. Amsterdam. Joost Hartgers, Bookseller, in Hospital Lane, next to the Town Hall.

Spilbergen's voyage extends to sixty-one pages, and (according to Theal) contains "an account of the naming of Table Bay," and it is also stated in Fairbridge and Noble's "Catalogue of Books relating to South Africa" (1885), that "Van Spilbergen or Spilberg gave Table Bay, previously known as Saldanah Bay, its present designation, transferring the original name to the bay to the northward."

The account of Admiral van der Hagen's voyage takes up thirty-four pages, and gives a description of the capture of the Portuguese forts of "Amboyna" and "Tydor." The pamphlet was first printed in a series in the year 1646, and this edition, which has a similar woodcut to that in Cornelis Houtman's "Eerste Schipvaart," is evidently one of the same series of publications, and has a folding plate in six compartments.

An address given at Zwolle (Holland), 18th October, 1900, to the Ministers' Missionaries Association of the Provinces of Overijssel and Drente, by Rev. C. Spoelstra, Minister of the Dutch Reformed Church at Heinoo, Holland. With an introductory note by the Rev. John Clifford, M.A., D.D. (Third edition.) London: The New Age Press. . . . 32 pp. 8vo. 1902.

It is asserted that the Boers were not opposed to missions, not even to certain missionary societies, but only to certain missionaries. Thus, even the London Missionary Society, with whom the Boers have been at variance ever since the inception of the institution, once sent out a man—(true, a Dutchman by birth)—who “enjoyed the fullest confidence of the Boers,” whilst the large majority of their other missionaries, including Read, Van Der Kemp, Dr. Philip, and Dr. Livingstone, were amongst those who, it is stated, “set afloat . . . the most monstrous stories about the colonists . . . so that at last the word Boer came to be regarded as only another name for an ignorant and cruel oppressor of natives.” It is admitted, however, that there was something besides the ever-recurring misrepresentation of the Boers to account for their attitude towards the missions, and both Dr. Clifford and Mr. Spoelstra allude to the fact that opposition was brought about by “an exaggerated faith in a rigorous orthodoxy, a blind dread of departure from the accepted ecclesiastical standards of belief on the part of some of the missionaries.” It seems fairly proved that as long as what the missionaries preached did not interfere with Boer ideas as to true religion, and while they preserved a discreet silence upon everything they might disapprove of respecting the conduct of the colonists, the Boers were certainly “not hostile to mission work.” As soon, however, as their habits were at all criticised, the Boers declared that they were opposed—not to mission work in general—“but to that kind of ‘mission’ of which Dr. Philip and others were the representatives, in which they could not be considered the servants of God, but only the exponents of a mischievous policy.”

the Government clerks sent out from Holland are so ignorant. It is argued that the cost of a journey to the Transvaal is not so enormous that men who desire an opening either for capital or labour should not go out and look for themselves.

Many would rather not have heard anything more about the 'Transvaal, the wearisome Transvaal.' . . . An account of the Case of Sir Robert Stanford, who had supplied the Government with food for the troops, ships, and convicts during the Anti-Convict Agitation, 1849. It is asserted that, owing to Sir Robert’s assistance, the Colony was saved from martial law, but “for doing his duty on this trying occasion . . . as a good citizen and good subject” he was made the object “of a more relentless social persecution than any to which any member of the community has ever before been subjected.” Captain Stanford was knighted by the Queen at the end of the year 1850, but “no one at the Cape would have anything to do with him. He was therefore mercilessly pillaged; his farms fell into disorder, the lands were uncultivated, crops rotted where they were grown,” &c.

The explorer was invited to visit Bulawayo on the occasion of the opening of the railway, and he took this opportunity of seeing South Africa for the first time. The volume is mainly devoted to an account of Rhodesia, but there are some remarks on the Transvaal. Mr. Stanley had an interview with President Kruger, and he expresses his amazement at the belief in his “greatness,” and states that in his opinion the Boer statesman was “dense, ignorant, and impenetrable . . . astute and bigoted, obstinate as a mule, and remarkably opinionated, vain and puffed up with the power conferred on him, vindictive, covetous, and always a Boer, which means a narrow-minded and obtuse provincial of the illiterate type.”

*STAPLES, S. : The Emigration of Gentlewomen. A woman’s word

from Natal. Ex. "The Nineteenth Century and After," No. 294, pp. 214-221. Roy. 8vo. 1901.

It is stated that "the Englishwoman . . . makes the worst colonist. She is for ever bemoaning herself as an exile . . . to an emigrant willing to be pleased, ready to receive kindness, the colonists will give freely, but they cast not their pearls before swine." Mention is made of the four hundred girls sent in the early days of Dutch rule, by the people of Holland : it is remarked that "from the cruel charity of an unhomelike home . . . they came to a country where they were of appreciative value to be wooed and won. . . . What wonder that the little Boers that grew up around the knees of such mothers loved the beautiful, free, and happy land of the Cape." The writer suggests that lady emigrants should be sent to training colleges which should be founded all over South Africa, particularly in the Western Provinces of the Cape Colony, where the Dutch element is now paramount. "Not in large towns, but where the conveniences of life are less accessible." Here they should be taught general housework, cooking, and nursing, and the idea that "husband-hunting" is the aim and end of female emigration should be eradicated. To such colleges "young men inviting out their inexperienced wives or brides could, and if wise would," send them to gain a knowledge of the requisites of colonial housekeeping. It is asserted that "in the colonies, a woman's influence on public life and private morals is more direct" than in the Mother Country, and that these women, thus educated, would form real homes in South Africa, and that now, "more than ever before, do we need the influence of the English Motherland."

The first and second volumes are devoted to the passerine birds, and in addition contain a bibliography relating to South African birds, systematic indices, a portrait of Dr. Stark, and a map of South Africa. Vol. III. relates to picarions, parrots, owls, hawks, and contains key of the orders, and indices; and Vol. IV. deals with game-birds, &c. &c., with indices. The work was commenced by Dr. Arthur Stark, "an accomplished naturalist, a great traveller, and one of the first ornithologists of the day. In September 1899 he was in Durban, and war being declared he offered his services, which were accepted. He left Durban for Ladysmith with the last batch of officers who succeeded in entering that town, and rendered good service in the siege." He "died from injuries received from a Boer shell while standing in the doorway of the Royal Hotel, Ladysmith.' (See DOONER, M.: "The Last Post.")

*STARK, JAMES H.: The British and Dutch in South Africa. A paper read before the Trinity Club of Trinity Church, the Dorchester Historical Society, and the Victorian Club of Boston, by James H. Stark. Being a collection of facts obtained from the most authentic sources, giving a true account of what caused the present war in South Africa, and what its effect will be on the future of the British Empire. Published at the request of the Victorian Club by James H. Stark. . . . Boston. 32 pp. Cr. 8vo. 1900.

The author states that in the course of a visit to England and Holland at the time of the outbreak of the South African War he was enabled to hear both sides of the question. He refers to the "blind and unreasonable hatred of England" brought about by the false and malicious statements of "the Fenian element," who are recommended to read a letter sent by Bishop Gaughran, the Roman Catholic Prelate of Kimberley, South Africa, to an inhabitant of Boston. The Bishop states that "England very seldom had a more just cause for war," and remarks, "Don't allow the idea to prevail that the Transvaal is a Republic except in name." He asserts that the Boer is brave but "ignorant and prejudiced to an alarming extent. . . . His prejudice shows itself principally as regards the Catholic Church, and secondly as regards the civilised habits of European nations." Mr. Stark gives a synopsis of the history of South Africa, with special reference to the Anglo-Boer Question; he was of opinion that the war was inevitable, "and that the aims of Paul Kruger, Reitz, Steyn, and others were to oust the British flag," and he remarks that the Dutch lost Belgium in 1834 by pursuing similar tactics to those of the Boers in South Africa, with regard to the questions of language and franchise; "the same spirit is shown by the Dutch in the Transvaal against the Outlanders."

When this volume was published, the author had only been three years in South Africa, but he gives some interesting information respecting the sub-continent, its wars, politics, and history, together with some observations on the Zulu War and the first annexation of the Transvaal. Mr. Statham appears to have been convinced that the Boers were, and ever had been, an ill-used and misrepresented race, but his reproaches, in this work, are mainly reserved for the Colonial Office—"The Curse of South Africa," as he styles it. He asserts that "for sixty-five years, since its final cession to England, South Africa has been governed in total darkness, and never once has even an attempt been made reasonably to enlighten Englishmen as to the nature of the questions to be solved, or the real reasons of the wars which they have had to pay for." He calls for light, peace, patience, to give the country a chance "of placing the three-cornered problem it presents in a fair way for solution."

The writer states that while in the "position of editor of the Natal Witness from May 1877 to December 1879," he had "the misfortune to take the unpopular side in respect to the Zulu War." He asserts that Mr. John X. Merriman persuaded him to give up his work in Natal and go to Cape Town with the object of starting a newspaper in the interests of Mr. Merriman's party, then out of office; he accordingly proceeded to Cape Town, but was deceived and disappointed by that gentleman and his associates. In 1882 he resumed his position as editor of the Natal Witness, and soon after he "found reason to suspect that fair play was not intended by the Natal Government, and by the 'official clique' which has long dominated all native matters in and around that Colony, towards Cetywayo, in respect of the conditions and manner of his restoration." He communicated his suspicions to the Daily News, of which journal he was the special correspondent, but was accused of deliberate falsehood by Sir Henry Bulwer, Governor of Natal, and subsequently he was attacked in the House of Commons by Mr. Ashley, Under-Secretary of State for the Colonies. Soon after, Mr. Statham was summarily dismissed from his position by the manager of the Daily News, and he maintains that this was brought about by the exposure of an incident in his early life by Mr. Merriman "on behalf of the 'official clique' in Natal."

A novel, the plot of which rests on an attempt to ruin a young man by falsely charging him with illicit diamond buying in Kimberley. Many well-known personages in Kimberley are depicted with the flimsiest veil of disguise, but the position of affairs on the diamond fields is grossly exaggerated, though the mixture of fact and fiction is at times somewhat entertaining.

Blacks, Boers, and British—Fifteen years after. . . . Ex. "Canada-Transvaal," by Joseph Aron. Pp. 28-60. 12mo. 1896.

See ARON, JOSEPH.

Reference is made to an article contributed by the writer to the Fortnightly Review, in March 1881, entitled "How to get out of the South African difficulty," in which it is suggested that South Africa be offered her independence "on certain prescribed conditions, only retaining for ourselves a naval port at the Cape . . . let the British flag disappear—that is so far as the internal administration is concerned—and the ties of kinship between the Dutch settlers in every part of South Africa would draw them together to make a single mass." Mr. Statham reviews the political history of South Africa since the publication of this article, and asserts that although his opinions might be considered "heretical," they were "the opinions held by a very large portion of the European population of South Africa."

With the exception of the first chapter, entitled "The Krugers and the Trek," which gives some biographical information respecting the Kruger family and its ancestors, the work resolves itself into a history of the Transvaal up to the year succeeding the Jameson Raid. By a careful system of elimination, President Kruger's character and career is presented in a most favourable light.

*STATHAM, F. REGINALD: South Africa as it is. . . . London: T. Fisher Unwin. . . . vi+311 pp. 8vo. 1897.

An account of political administration in South Africa, from the first annexation of the Transvaal to the Jameson Raid. The author represents every act of the Imperial authorities in the most unfavourable light, and is particularly ingenious in his advocacy of President Kruger and the Boers, while he is by no means scrupulous as to the exact accuracy of his statements. The extravagant manner in which his assertions are made may be gauged by his remarks on the liberty of the subject in Kimberley at this period, and he asserts that in this town "the greatest crime that can be committed is for a wage-earner to believe that he may exercise his political rights as a British subject living in a British Colony"; the writer was fully aware that this was an exaggerated misrepresentation of the political status of the Diamond City, as for some period he acted as the editor of a then important daily newspaper in the town.

*STATHAM, F. REGINALD: Paul Kruger: an Apology and a Defence. Ex. "The Fortnightly Review," No. CCCLXXV., pp. 468-478. Roy. 8vo. 1898.

It is stated that "there has never been, except perhaps with regard to the franchise, any legislation that could be properly called either repressive or retrogressive" in the Transvaal, and everything of which Mr. Kruger has been accused is explained away by the simple argument that he considered that the redress of the complaint would imperil the independence of the Republic. Much stress is laid upon the magnanimity displayed by the Transvaal President with respect to the flag incidents of 1890 and 1894, and the surrender of Dr. Jameson and his troopers to the British Government, and it is maintained that this was not "the conduct of a fanatic . . . nor of a sworn and irreconcilable opponent of the interests of the alien population." According to the author, Mr. Kruger "appears in the light of one of the most remarkable figures of the present century. Impervious to flattery; gifted with an unrivalled shrewdness in his estimation of men and events; penetrated by a religious conviction . . .; patriotic in every fibre; courageous, watchful, patient, humane; possessed of a humour as genuine as that of Abraham Lincoln . . . the representative of a race of whom it has been truly said (Theal) that 'no people not of British descent ever offered such favourable material for conversion into loyal subjects as did these South Africans when they came by conquest under British Rule.'"

- *STATHAM, F. REGINALD: The Truth about the Transvaal. The South African Crisis. Second Edition. Reprinted from "The Social Democrat." London: Printed by the Twentieth Century Press, Limited. 16 pp. 8vo. 1899.

A violent attack on Mr. Rhodes, the De Beers Company, and the Transvaal capitalists, combined with a deprecation of the "grievances" of the Uitlanders, and an advocacy of Mr. Kruger's policy and attitude. Mr. Statham states that "the agitation in which the South African question is now plunged is to be viewed strictly in connection with the endeavour of the capitalist group to get sole possession, with the benefit of the Transvaal goldfields. . . . If a war should break out it will be at once the most infamous, unnecessary, and destructive war in which Great Britain has ever been engaged. . . . We are in sight of the wickedest conspiracy of the last two centuries—a conspiracy, all the gain of which, if it is successful, will remain with two or three unscrupulous speculators, and all the loss and shame of which, whether successful or not, will rest upon Great Britain."

Mr. Statham contended that Mr. Gladstone's policy as regards South Africa was "a signal success," and that "all the present trouble has arisen because those principles have been discarded." He maintained that Kimberley, not Pretoria, was "the plague spot" in South Africa, and complained that "the hinterland of South Africa . . . was absolutely given away to a brace of speculators, one of whom was at the time not even a British subject." Mr. Rhodes, he asserted, conspired against the Transvaal, bought up all the African papers, and secured the support of the London Times, and even the "Daily News, the official organ of the Liberal party, was . . . made over to the Rhodesian ring."

As far back as 1893 his services to the Boers appear to have been recognised, Mr. Reitz making him a monthly allowance of £10. The author appears to have contributed to most of the papers favouring the Boer side of the Transvaal question, and he was eventually retained, early in 1896, to watch the interests of the Republic in England, at a salary of £50 per month. He maintains that he did not know for certain whether he was employed by the Transvaal Government or the Netherlands Railway, having seen both Dr. Leyds and Mr. Lippert on the subject.

This work affords an accurate and valuable account of the Cape in the last quarter of the eighteenth century, with an interesting description of Cape Town and its inhabitants. Stavorinus visited Stellenbosch, Hottentot Holland, Vergeleegen, Klappmuts, and other places of interest in the Colony, and contributes notes upon the position of the country farmers, whom he regarded as being superior in character and manners to the colonists living in the towns. He remarks on the avarice exhibited by the residents of Cape Town, their indisposition to study, and "love of repose and inactivity—what may be denominated laziness." He comments on the superiority of the women while young, but speaks of their slovenliness after marriage, in their houses and persons, and the apathy of the people generally. He draws a gruesome picture of the Cape Town hospital, then opposite the Dutch Reformed Church, and asserts that this institution had, at times, to accommodate 1000 patients, and the sanitary condition of the place was so bad that the sailors who carried the patients to the building often brought back to the ships a fever contracted from the inmates. He states that the inhabitants of Cape Town were disagreeable to strangers (the French excepted), jealous and envious, and much given to slander and calumny. Stavorinus severely criticises the Government for its arbitrary methods and the public officials for their rapacity, and gives some information respecting the grievances of the colonists, and statistics as to the revenue and expenditure and the settlement.

- *STEAD, W. T. : Blastus, the King's Chamberlain. . . . Being the "Review of Reviews Annual for 1896." Review of Reviews. London. 100 pp. Roy. 8vo. 1895.

The volume, as a whole, is devoted to a skit on the Right Hon. Joseph Chamberlain and his friends and supporters. One of the cartoons represents "The Coronation of Lord Rosebery as King of Israel on Mount Zion," and grouped amongst the grandees present are Lord Rothschild as High Priest, and Messrs. Hirsch and Barney Barnato as high officials.

It is stated in the Preface that the "History of the Mystery" "will not be appreciated at its proper value until the Select Committee (Jameson Raid) next Session has begun its sittings." The tale, with its very transparently disguised personages, gives a sketch of the Raid, and is remarkable for the justification of Mr. Rhodes in the Preface signed by Mr. Stead, considering the latter's subsequent attacks on the South African statesman. Some parts of the story have been "blackened out," in the style of the Russian Press Censors, as they are said to have contained passages which "one of the persons named in the story considered . . . contained secrets," which had been communicated to Mr. Stead, "the divulcation of which, in his opinion . . . would be detrimental to many interests, both personal and imperial, in London and South Africa." The author, in alluding to Mr. Rhodes, remarks, "How thoroughly loyal this great son of ours has been to his Motherland, how staunch and true he has been to the Empire, which he has done so much to strengthen and extend."

- *STEAD, W. T. : Shall I Slay my Brother Boer? An Appeal to the Conscience of Britain. "Review of Reviews" Office . . . London. 64 pp. Roy. 8vo. 1899.

This pamphlet was issued before the outbreak of the South African War, and claims to set forth "soberly and seriously . . . the case either for or against the appeal to the ultima ratio of nations." Mr. Stead asserts that the majority of those advocating war give their reasons somewhat in this fashion: "The Boers are a bad lot. Their arrogance is insufferable. They whipped us at Majuba Hill. It is now our turn to pay them out . . . our Imperial interests, our national prestige, compel us to go to war." The writer combats these arguments, together with others of a more serious character, and asserts that "The first attempt on the Transvaal was made three years ago, when Mr. Rhodes, with the full cognisance of Mr. Chamberlain, aided and abetted the conspiracy to overthrow the Boer Republic." Long extracts are given from "Olive Schreiner's appeal," and from the speeches of Sir William Harcourt, Sir Edward Clark, and Messrs. Morley and Courtney, and the readers are appealed to help in the task of endeavouring to prevent "the incalculable horrors of civil and servile war."

- *STEAD, W. T.: The Scandal of the South African Committee. A Plain Narrative for Plain Men. . . . "Review of Reviews" Office. . . . London. . . . 83 pp. Roy. 8vo. 1899.

The writer draws a distinction "between the conspiracy to bring about a revolution in the Transvaal, with a British force on the border in support, which was the Jameson Plan, and the Jameson Raid. . . . The Raid was Dr. Jameson's own act, and it spoiled everything. The Jameson Plan was, that to which Mr. Chamberlain was privy." Mr. Stead remarks, "I have never made any charge, or accusation, or complaint against Mr. Chamberlain for the support he gave the conspiracy against the Government of Paul Kruger. Neither do I at this moment lay any stress upon that side of the question. . . ." The writer stated that what he criticised was the manner in which the Secretary of State for the Colonies "persisted, in the face of all warnings and protests, in adopting a policy of concealing the truth, denying facts, and making both parties in the House of Commons unwilling accomplices in a conspiracy to deceive the nation."

- *STEAD, W. T.: Are We in the Right? An Appeal to Honest Men. . . . "Review of Reviews" Office. . . . London. . . . 76 pp. Roy. 8vo. 1899.

It is stated that 60,000 copies of the pamphlet entitled "Shall I Slay my Brother Boer?" . . . "were disposed of before the slaying began," but it is urged that now when "war has broken out, the question of its justice becomes more acute." The writer, while admitting that the condition of the Uitlanders in the Transvaal was not all that might be desired, asserts that to stigmatise these conditions as "intolerable" was merely to "trifle with the English language." He discusses the "Pretext for Slaughter," the "Story of the Negotiations," the "Refusal of Arbitration," and the "Genesis of a Crime and its Nemesis," maintaining that in going to war we have been "entirely in the wrong, no matter how just may be the claim which we make for the redress of the wrongs of the Uitlanders."

- *———: Another Copy: Nos. 1-7. 112 pp. Quarto. 1899.

The publication appears to have been brought to a close somewhat abruptly with the thirtieth number, and no intimation of the intention is to be found in the last issue. The first volume was completed with No. 28, on the last sheet of which is an advertisement offering the bound volume (containing 450 pages) for sale. Of what was intended to form the second volume, only thirty-two pages were published. The work is a remarkable collection of pro-Boer literature from all sources, and is characterised by the extremity of the views of Mr. Stead and his friends. In the publication issued on December 1, under the heading of "The Seventh Week of the War," the following prediction is made: "In the event of Kimberley being evacuated the destruction of the diamond mines will precede the destruction of the Rand mines by several weeks." There is a directness respecting this statement which would appear to point to an intimate knowledge of the intention of the Boers.

To a great extent this pamphlet is a reprint of "The Scandal of the South African Committee," but there is a fresh Preface, commenting on Mr. Balfour's speeches at this period, and on the publication of what is termed the "Hawksley Dossier," in L'Indépendance Belge of Brussels. There is also an Appendix, containing twenty-eight pages, which contain, inter alia, the text of the documents of the "Hawksley Dossier," consisting mainly of copies of telegrams and cables, with explanatory notes, an account of "conspiracies" . . . "Nos. I., II., and III.;" a narrative of the interview between Mr. J. B. The author attacks the policy of the administration, which he considered responsible for the outbreak of the South African War, in a series of questions and answers, which discuss "What is the Issue?" "How the War was got up," "What the War has Taught us," and "The Future of the Empire." In a foreword to the reader Mr. Stead observes, "Some day . . . every one will marvel at the moderation of my language and upbraid me, not for the vehemence of my appeals, but for my failure to do justice to the unutterable infamy of the crime for which the nation is now asked to accept the responsibility."

The front page is in very deep mourning, and contains a kind of manifesto by William T. Stead, who remarks, "The Electors of Great Britain by formal vote have made the South African War their own. . . . It is no longer Milner's War, or Chamberlain's War, it is our War. It is therefore high time that we looked a little into the way in which this war of ours is being waged. . . . War, indeed, the nation voted for, but not for war upon women and children, in which the impotence of our arms is supplemented by the superior efficacy of the firebrand, and famine and lust are employed against the women to crush the spirit of the race whom our Generals are unable to subdue."

Mr. Stead remarks, "The evidence collected in this pamphlet will be useful as affording the most astonishing picture of how not to make peace the world has seen for many a long day." London: "Review of Reviews" Office. xvii + 300 pp. Cr. 8vo. 1906.

The object of the work, as stated by the author, "is primarily to discuss whether the British Empire shall be Liberal or Jingo, that is to say, whether it shall be the best or the worst of Empires known to mankind." There is a fierce denunciation of "Downing Street" ("the deadliest enemy of the Empire") with regard to its relations with South Africa, accompanied by a recital of its misdeeds in the capacities of "despot," "meddler," and "devastator." Mr. Stead's views upon South African political matters are given at some length, and include a statement to the effect that "The incredible weakness of the Schreiner Ministry" in allowing the use of the Cape railways to the Imperial authorities in time of war, precipitated the outbreak of hostilities, and thus, it is argued, Mr. W. P. Schreiner and his colleagues became involved in the shame of the disastrous war which, as the sworn advisers and loyal subjects of the Crown, they were bound to have averted." Among the narratives related by Mr. Stead is one to the effect that a British officer—whose name is not mentioned—promised a Dutch rebel to spare his life "if he would give evidence that would incriminate Olive Schreiner and Mr. T. de Water" (probably Dr. Te Water). It is stated that the man was requested to sign a paper saying that he would never have joined the commandoes if he had not read Oliver Schreiner's works, or heard "Mr. T. Water's" speeches; and it is asserted that, although the Dutchman, thus tempted, signed the paper, he was shot the next morning. Another interesting anecdote refers to Lord Milner's appointment as High Commissioner, which Mr. Stead states was partly due to his recommendation, as he "pressed Mr. Rhodes to take him instead of Lord Rosmead" two years previously, but the Cape statesman remarked, "If I cannot get Herky (Sir Hercules Robinson, afterwards Lord Rosmead), I will take Milner." "When Lord Rosmead broke down, Mr. Rhodes said to me, 'Now I will take Milner,' and he took him."

Steedman.* The greater part of which were set up at the Cape of Good Hope by Julis Verreaux, late of the Jardine de Plantes, Paris; and conveyed to this country at a very considerable expense, which, together with a highly finished painting of the interior of the country, are now exhibiting at the African Glen, Colosseum, Regent's Park. Sixth edition. With Appendix. London: Printed by William Clowes. . . . Pp. 32, 2, 12. 8vo. 1834.

Many of the species were probably shown for the first time in England, and there are descriptions of the majority of the more important exhibits, and a good account of the views represented in the panoramic painting which occupied 1000 feet of canvas.

Vol. I. x + 330 pp.; Vol. II. v + 358 pp. 8vo. 1835.

Inscription on fly-leaf, "A. C. Stratten, Esquire, with the Author's kind regards."

An account of travels in South Africa undertaken in the course of a residence in the Cape extending over a period of ten years. During his expeditions, Mr. Steedman traversed a great part of the Cape Colony and Kaffraria, penetrating the country up to Griqualand West. He was an industrious and able collector and naturalist, and the volumes contain much valuable information respecting the fauna of the country. His name was given to a species of meerkat (Cynictis Steedmanii), which is mentioned under this title by Mr. W. Ogilby (Proceedings of the Zoological Society for 1833), and also in the index of the "Report of the Expedition for Exploring Central Africa" (see SMITH, Sir ANDREW). The work gives many details respecting early travels in South Africa, with sketches of native races and their history and wars, the pioneer colonists of Natal, &c. The Appendices, which extend to 213 pages, include a letter and journal by Mr. A. G. Bain, who accompanied Dr. (afterwards Sir A.) Smith's expedition into the interior as far as Philippolis, and gives an account of the journey, an interesting narrative of the wreck of the Grosvenor, and much valuable matter respecting the Kat River and other settlements in Kaffraria, and the Kaffir outbreaks and wars up to this period.

*STEENEKAMP, ANNA ELIZABETH. (Née RETIEF): "The Journey of a Voor-Trekker." In "Cape Monthly Magazine," vol. xiii., New Series, pp. 180-187. 8vo. 1876.

An account of the sufferings and adventures of the emigrant farmers written by one of the trekkers who left the Zeekoe River on May 5, 1837. Most of the writer's relations died from illness or were killed by the natives, and the tale of the woes of the emigrants is one of deep misery. Mrs. Steenekamp (her first husband was called Hattingh) settled in Natal, and she gives an account of the campaign of the Boers, with Captain Smith, in which she states that "Women and children were stripped of their clothes and had to fly naked. Farms and lands were laid waste by the heathens, . . . so that we, through the unceasing thefts of the Kaffirs, again fell into poverty."

Arriving at Cape Town on Oct. 10, 1899, Mr. Steevens lost little time in proceeding up country. One of his most interesting letters was sent from Burghersdorp, where he interviewed the Dopper parson editor of the Dutch newspaper, who, it is stated, "sluices out weekly vials of wrath upon Hofmeyr and Schreiner for 'machinating' to keep patriot Afrikanders off the oppressing Briton's throat." The author says the minister was "a very charming, courteous old gentleman, well informed, and his political bias . . . mellowed with an irresistible sense of humour," who remarked, "They call me rebel. But I ask you, my friend, is it natural that I—I, Hollander born, Dutch Afrikaner since '60—should be as loyal to the British Government as a Britisher should be. . . . I am a law-abiding subject of the Queen, and that is all they can ask of me. . . . I look on this war as the sequel of 1881. I have told them all these years, it is not finished; war must come." Mr. Steevens was present at the battle of Elandslaagte and observed that the Boer prisoners "were manly and courteous, and through their untrimmed beards and rough corduroys a voice said very plainly, 'Ruling race.' These Boers might be brutal, might be treacherous; but they held their heads like gentlemen." The author was besieged in Ladysmith and gives a vivid account of the investment. The last chapter of the volume was contributed by Mr. Vernon Blackburn, and contains some account of the death and funeral of Mr. Steevens, with some appreciative notes on his character, abilities, and work.

It is stated in the memoir that "The great necessity imposed upon our England by the policy of the Afrikaners inside and out of the Cape Colony has cost us many precious lives." Amongst these was George Steevens, the well-known journalist and war correspondent, who, after an active and brilliant career, succumbed to enteric fever during the siege of Ladysmith, on January 15, 1900, at the age of thirty years. There is a portrait of Mr. Steevens.

It is stated that the railway was "commandeered" by the Government of the South African Republic under Article 2 of Law 20 of 1896, while "the direction" of the Company had issued "service orders," signed by J. Van Kretschmar, at Pretoria, on the 6th and 7th of September, providing for "the action of the Personnel in case of a Portion of the Line being taken Possession of by the Enemy," and for "Commando Service." Mr. Steinmetz gives full information respecting the services rendered to the South African Republic by the Company with regard to mobilisation, the operations in Natal, and the use of the workshops.

Henderson, late Director of Intelligence, Headquarter Staff, South Africa. Longmans, Green & Co. . . . London, New York, and Bombay. xliii + 268 pp. Cr. 8vo. 1901.

Count Sternberg resolved to see the South African War in some capacity, under the British or Boer flag. He offered his services to both sides, and eventually, so he asserts, went as war correspondent with the Boers. His experiences were mainly with Cronje, and after witnessing the investment of Kimberley he was captured at Paardeberg. His strictures on Buller and Methuen are very severe, but he is enthusiastic in praise of the English soldiers, while he condemns the obstinacy, ignorance, and egotism of the Boers. The book ends with a chapter on the Military Lessons of the War, and there is a critical introduction by Colonel Henderson, traversing some of the author's opinions.

"The Nineteenth Century and After," No. 298, pp. 1020-1029.

It is suggested that children from private, public, and religious orphanages should be selected and received into "specially founded 'Homes' or settlements in South Africa, there to be educated and trained for colonial life," and it is pointed out that the guardians of the poor have almost unlimited powers, although "legislation might perhaps be necessary, to enable to send children, or contribute to the cost of sending them to South Africa, and there educate them." It is remarked that "It may be taken for granted that the Colonial Government would not be able or inclined to do much beyond offering suitable and ample sites for the settlements and the necessary surrounding lands." According to some estimates given, 22,000 children were being educated in various institutions in Great Britain in 1901, "the greater portion orphans and friendless." It is considered that with careful physical and mental selection much could be done in the way of strengthening the British element in South Africa, which would tend to "the effacement of the race troubles of a great group of colonies," and be "a lasting advantage to the Empire."

including remarks on the approach to Nyassa by the Zambesi.

The author discusses the benefits of missions to Central Africa and the great advantages offered by the Zambesi route to the Interior. He advocates the construction of a road from the Coast to Lake Nyassa, and argues that the claims of the Portuguese to unoccupied coast lines and to suzerainty over neighbouring tribes not under their control should not be recognised.

A narrative of the adventures of the "Sharpshooters," a corps of irregular horse raised in Great Britain by Lord Dunraven for service in the South African War. On the arrival of the force at Beira they found many transports containing Australian Bushmen, Canadians, New Zealanders, and Victorians, with whom they soon fraternised, but they were shortly ordered up country, and there is an amusing account of their journey to Umtali, on the then somewhat erratic Beira Railway. Their trek southwards was "ostensibly to assist in the relief of Mafeking," and they marched through Rhodesia, finding most of the towns in a semi-deserted condition until they reached Bulawayo, where their journey, as far as this volume is concerned, was brought to a termination.

It is observed that, "although occasional notes on the state of the weather prevailing at Table Bay appear in the Journals of the early Dutch Governors at the Cape, the first regularly-kept record of meteorological phenomena seems to have been that of the Abbé de la Caille, from 1st July 1751 to June 30, 1752." It is claimed that the Lovedale Institution is carried out on what is called "the combined method, in which religious, educational, and industrial teaching are conjoined with the teaching of the Gospel." The volume gives details respecting the history, aims, and methods of Lovedale, its past results, and its benefactors and needs ; the appreciation in which it is held by the natives is proved by the fact that at this period the coloured people were paying £2000 a year in school fees for their children, and that in this manner they had up to the year 1894 contributed the large sum of over £25,000 to the upkeep of the institution.

This is President Steyn's reply to the letter of Lord Kitchener, enclosing his proclamation of August 6, 1901, in which the latter intimates that more severe measures would be taken against those engaged in the guerilla warfare. The President, in reply, recapitulates the grievances of the Boers since the Jameson Raid, dwells on the magnanimity displayed by Mr. Kruger, asserts that the Boer position is by no means hopeless, and asks that the war be concluded by giving independence to the two Republics, and an amnesty to the Cape rebels. The Supplement further contains an article on "The Origin of the War," and maintains that "the subjugation of the two Republics" was "all along Mr. Chamberlain's plan."

A biography of the late President of the "Orange Free State," brought up to the time when he left South Africa after the signing of the Peace at Vereeniging. It is stated that Mr. Steyn was born at Bloemfontein on October 2, 1857, and educated at the "Grey College" in that city and subsequently at Amsterdam, whence he proceeded to study at the "Inns of Court, London." Returning to South Africa he practised as a barrister, and was elected President of the Orange Free State in 1895, on the resignation of President Reitz.

This early pamphlet on the Diamond Fields was published by Messrs. Steytler & Steytler, immigration and general agents, who predicted that the new discoveries would find employment for ten thousand diggers for one hundred years. Of the permanent or dry mines, only Jagersfontein and Bultfontein are mentioned, and it is stated that the mining at the river is arduous in its nature. The utmost excitement appears to have prevailed, and in a letter dated from Pniel, July 11, 1870, it is observed : "Long before day-dawn, and after the shadows of night have come down, digging and washing by firelight and candle are prosecuted . . . on both sides of the Vaal is one grand display of cheerful, eager, and hearty labour. Digging, loading, carrying, washing, and sorting, and a general excitement amid all these, are everywhere manifested."

- *STICKNEY, ALBERT : The Transvaal Outlook, with maps. . . . New York : Dodd, Mead & Co. . . . 139 pp. 8vo. 1900.

The work deals with the position at the seat of war in South Africa and the difficulties of transportation. The writer, though extolling the valour of the British army, descants on "its lack of brains" and "the lack of adequate mental powers in the men at the head." He warns Great Britain that she is at the end of her resources, after allowing "the helm of State to get into the hands of a cheap Birmingham demagogue, who in his nature has nothing whatever that is noble or magnanimous."

The volume is something like an "enlarged directory" showing where any "particular regiment or battery added to, or mayhap lost, some of its reputation," and it endeavours to enumerate the "number of mentions each regiment or battery got in the chief despatches written during the war. Where casualties are mentioned, it is more to bring out the severity of the fighting in a particular engagement than to compile statistics."

The writer states that "no attempt has been made to write a detailed account of the work of each corps, but it has been the author's aim to give a fair idea of the value of the services of each. Where it has been possible to find or get the views of a British regular officer on the worth of such services, these views are given." It is recorded that the number of South African irregulars was about 50,000, and the contributions from over-sea Colonies 29,928, "thus we had in the field about 80,000 men furnished by the Colonies and Dependencies of Britain."

This rare and curious set of plates appear to have been engraved in England about the time of Stockenstrom's resignation from office, and evidently represent the views of the Colonial Party who so strongly opposed the policy of the Lieut.-Governor. Many of the caricatures allude to the supposed Hottentot descent of Sir Andries, and to his adoption of Dr. Philip's views with regard to the Native Question. The artist, Mr. F. I'Ons, was born in Islington in 1802, and came to South Africa in 1827; he had been a student under the sculptor Thornycroft, and later on settled in Graham's Town and was well known in the Eastern Province as a delineator of the scenery of the country. His name appears in "The Eastern Province Directory for 1848" as follows: I'ons, F., Artist, York Street. He died in Graham's Town in 1889.

*(STOCKENSTROM, Sir ANDRIES) : Report of the Trial Stockenstrom vs. Campbell for Libel. In the Supreme Court, Cape of Good Hope, February 28th and March 1st, 1838. Printed at P. A. Brand's, Cape Town. To be had at the Office of "De Zuid-Afrikaan" and "Graham's Town Journal." 57 pp. 8vo. 1838.

Sir Andries charged Captain Campbell with causing depositions to be made "charging Captain Stockenstrom with having, in order to revenge himself for his father's death, deliberately fired at and killed a Kaffir child in the year 1813. . . . The case was tried before the Supreme Court, then consisting of Sir John Wylde, Messrs. Menzies and Kekewich . . . and to the intense surprise of every one, judgment was given for the Defendant." (Autobiography of Sir Andries Stockenstrom.)

The case was of great interest to the country, being intimately connected with the disputes between Dr. Philip's party and Messrs. Moodie and Chase. The colonists were greatly excited, and illuminated Graham's Town when the result of the case was known. Subsequently a Court of Honour, presided over by Sir G. Napier, acquitted Stockenstrom of the charges brought against him.

From "The Graham's Town Journal." To which is appended a full Report of the Trial. Graham's Town: Printed and Published by Meurant & Godlonton. 66 pp., and Report of the Trial, 57 pp. 12mo. 1838.

The pamphlet comments on "the audacious but covert attempt of the Commercial Advertiser to enlist in favour of the plaintiff the popular sympathy," and it is stated that the editor of the Cape Town paper, "in the very face of all the evidence to the contrary . . . has denounced the defendant as a conspirator, the witnesses brought forward by him as perjurers, and the court by implication as criminally partial and corrupt."

This scarce pamphlet contains a somewhat heated account of the Kaffir War, with regard to Sir Andries Stockenstrom's command of the Burgher levies and his disputes with the commanders of the British troops. The author states, "The following pages . . . will help to account for the extraordinary fact, that the most powerful and expensive armament ever collected upon this frontier has utterly failed to subdue a barbarous, undisciplined foe." The volume gives considerable information respecting the hostilities, but the constant jealousies and disputes are somewhat difficult to follow, and as Theal remarks, "an ordinary blue-book is light reading compared with it."

*STOCKENSTROM, Sir ANDRIES : The autobiography of the late Sir Andries Stockenstrom, Bart., sometime Lieutenant-Governor of the Eastern Province of the Colony of the Cape of Good Hope. Edited by his son-in-law, the Honourable C. W. Hutton, M.E.C., Cape of Good Hope. With a Preface by His Honour S. G. A. Shippard, C.M.G., Administrator of British Bechuanaland, &c. . . . In two volumes, Vol. I. xviii + 440 pp. ; Vol. II. viii + 467 pp. Cape Town : J. C. Juta & Co. 12mo. 1887.

Andries Stockenstrom was born in Cape Town on July 6, 1792, and two years later accompanied his parents to Swellendam, where his father had been appointed Secretary of the district. He was educated in Cape Town, and in 1808 entered the Colonial Civil Service at Graaff-Reinet, where his father was now Landrost. In 1811 he entered the army as ensign, but his father having been killed in a campaign with the Kaffirs, he was appointed Deputy Landrost of Graaff-Reinet, receiving the full appointment on May 12, 1815. During this period the Slachter's Nek episode took place, and the work contains an account of the insurrection, showing that Stockenstrom acted with considerable courage and decision. There is some account of the war between Gaika and Hintza, the hostilities with the Kaffirs, and the disputes of the Landrost with Captain Somerset. It is interesting to note that at this period Stockenstrom was visited by Dr. Philip and Pringle, and had some difficulty in persuading them that he was not hostile to the missionaries. In 1828 he was selected by Governor Bourke for the post of "Commissioner-General of the Frontier," and was made a member of the Council of Advice, and in 1829 he organised the Hottentot settlement at the Kat River and located over 100 English and Dutch farmers "from the Winterberg to the Junction of the Koonap and Fish Rivers." In 1833 he visited Europe on leave, and while there his office was abolished and he received a pension of £300 a year, which he considered unfair and inadequate. After travelling for some time on the continent he went to London to give evidence before the Royal Commission on Aborigines, and his statements were severely censured by the South African Colonists and created great surprise. He was subsequently appointed Lieutenant-Governor of the Cape Colony under Sir B. D'Urban, and sailed for South Africa on April 21, 1836, and on his arrival at Graham's Town received an address of welcome, which, however, contained a protest against his evidence given before the Royal Commission. His retention of this office was characterised by the hostility of the colonists and the military, but he appears to have rendered considerable service to the Government, especially with regard to the administration of the country and the reorganisation of the Civil Service. In 1838 an inquiry was held respecting a charge which had been brought against him concerning the shooting of a Kaffir, twenty-five years previously; the inquiry had been held at his own request, and the finding of the court not being to his satisfaction he proceeded to England and placed his resignation in the hands of Lord Glenelg. The latter statesman also relinquished his office about this period, and his successor, Lord John Russell, did not consider it advisable that Stockenstrom should be reinstated, but he conferred a Baronetcy upon him, with a pension of £700 per annum. He returned to the Cape in 1840, and in 1846 was made Commandant-General of the Burghers, and took part in the campaign against Kreli with much ability, but disputes arising with the other military leaders, he resigned his position. In 1850 he entered the Cape Legislative Council, but in the middle of the third session his health broke down, and he proceeded with his family to Europe, where he remained for four years. Returning to the Cape, he was met with a hearty welcome from the Colonists, but after two years' stay he left again for England, where he arrived in very poor health, but survived for two years, dying on March 15, 1864. In many respects Stockenstrom proved himself a valuable administrator, but his violence of language against his political opponents often placed him in an unfavourable light, and he was extremely unpopular with a large section of the colonists for a considerable period. Theal remarks ("History of South Africa, 1834-1854") that he was "self-willed and crotchety, but unquestionably an able man . . . unremitting in industry and undaunted in presence of danger."

With an introductory address to the Right Honourable John Adams, President of the Continental Congress of America. London : Printed for J. Johnson, St. Paul's Church-Yard. xlvii+112 pp. 8vo. 1798.

Captain Stout's ship went ashore in a great gale "a few miles distant from the mouth of the river Infanta," a place localised by Theal as being "between the mouths of the Keiskama and Beka rivers." He and his crew were well treated by the Kaffirs, who assisted them, directing them how to proceed to the nearest European settlements, and furnishing them with guides. On starting, the party consisted of sixty men, but only twenty-four arrived at the residence of Jan Du Pliesjes, the others being left behind from time to time, although some of them eventually arrived in the Cape Colony. The farmer showed the shipwrecked sailors the utmost hospitality and lent them a waggon, oxen, and Hottentot drivers, with whose assistance they eventually arrived at Cape Town. They were received by the Boers with much kindness, which Captain Stout notes "with scrupulous attention to fidelity, because the colonists, without distinction, have been frequently represented as a ferocious banditti, scarcely to be kept within the pale of authority." They arrived at Cape Town on July 30, 1796, and it is stated that they were received by General Craig with some abruptness, and in an unsympathetic manner, but that Admiral Elphinstone did everything in his power to assist them. Captain Stout remarks, that "many of the colonists live by murdering and plundering the unoffending inhabitants of the deserts," but he observes that those that he personally met belonged to a "deserving class," and he considered it his duty "to preserve their characters from the general opprobrium." He states that the Boers "execrated the Dutch Government for their oppressive conduct towards them," but it appears that they were nevertheless by no means unanimously in favour of the British occupation of the country. Stout returned to Europe in the Saint Cecilia, arriving in Ireland about the middle of November 1796.

It is remarked that it would be "an entire misrepresentation of public feeling in the colonies to state that in any one colony there is a real agreement as to what Imperial Federation means, or a desire to surrender any power of self-government that a colony now possesses." It is stated that Earl Grey pointed out that Colonial Federation should precede Imperial Federation, and asserted that "Up to the present (1887) it has seemed to be the desire of the British Government to make the Cape Colony the ruler of South Africa, and to annex the territories held by the Boers and the native races to that Colony. This mode of treatment will have to be abandoned . . . the Earl of Carnarvon and Mr. Froude . . . attempted to force federation, and from a Cape Colony point of view only."

It is stated that "the data was compiled at a time, and for the special information of the industrial hands on the South African Diamond Fields, when want and distress sorely afflicted them, they by memorials and deputations prayed the Cape Government to purchase, or by other constitutional means to throw open the Wesselton mine for the relief of the acute suffering then existing."

It is stated that the author, in conjunction with Mr. Orpen, Civil Commissioner of Griqualand West, was occupied during the months of March and April 1872, in "making a tour of inspection of the new territory (lately under the rule of the Chief Waterboer), for the information of his Excellency Sir Henry Barkly," and was able "to collect a considerable amount of information, which . . . will throw much additional light upon the geological formation of this portion of the African continent." Mr. Stow remarks that, in addition to a record of his observations during his tour, he will furnish "such facts . . . as I have been able to collect after a residence of nearly nine months in the neighbourhood of De Beers' New Rush and Du Toit's Pan."

With numerous illustrations. By George W. Stow, F.G.S., F.R.G.S. Edited by George McCall Theal, Litt.D., LL.D. . . . London: Swan Sonnenschein & Co., Limited. New York: The Macmillan Co. xii + 618 pp. Roy. 8vo. 1905.

During a residence in South Africa of nearly forty years the author assiduously collected memoranda respecting the Bushmen and Hottentots and Kaffir tribes from every reliable quarter. Mr. Stow did not live to see his work completed, but after his death his manuscript and notes were acquired by Miss Lloyd, the learned editress of the South African Folk-Lore Journal (1879-80), who finally placed them in the hands of Dr. Theal, who undertook the editorship and saw the volume through the press. The work is one of the most complete, minute, and reliable of the ethnological books of South Africa published up to date, more especially with regard to the Bushmen, whom the author asserts are the "true aborigines of the country," having been, to a great extent, ousted by the stronger races, who "without exception were mere intruders." Much valuable information is brought forward with a view of determining the antiquity of these aborigines, whose stone weapons, found in a strata belonging to what is called "the second, or minor lake-period of South Africa, indicate an existence representing a period which can be reckoned by "tens of thousands" of years, "if we would form an approximate idea of their probable duration." Referring to the remains of the art productions of the race, Mr. Theal remarks that Miss Lloyd, "the greatest living authority upon the Bushmen," doubted whether Mr. Stow's division of the race "into two branches of painters and sculptors could be maintained." The volume contains some original coloured illustrations of Bushman paintings representing hunting scenes, weapons, &c., photographs of the natives from Miss Lloyd's collections, a sketch map of Central and Southern Africa showing the migration of the races, and a copious and exhaustive index compiled by Dr. Theal.

The writer gives an interesting sketch of the discovery of the Rand Gold Fields, and asserts that his theory that the conglomerate beds extend right across the continent from east to west, had been propounded by him as early as 1885-6. Mr. Struben prospected at Pilgrim's Rest as far back as 1867, and later on engaged in diamond digging on the banks of the Vaal in 1870, and in gold-mining in Lydenburg in 1872-3, while he was one of the first to work the De Beers Diamond Mine. He came to the conclusion in 1883 that the Witwatersrand district "was auriferous, and by far the best and richest of any I had seen in Africa."

This publication contains a selection from the author's letters to the Morning Post, while acting as war correspondent, and are characterised by considerable vigour and freedom of language. Mr. Stuart could certainly not be said to be dominated by any sentimental bias in favour of the Boers, and in one communication expressed his satisfaction in witnessing the burning of a farmhouse belonging to a " mischievous rebel," an avowal that caused Sir Wilfred Lawson to stigmatise him in the House of Commons as a " human demon disguised as a war correspondent." The writer boldly advocated the custom of looting, observing, " It has a salutary effect on the inhabitants of the country," who " trade on our chivalry." He asks if " Mr. Kruger had had to feed ten or fifteen thousand women and children, would the war have been ended . . . or would it not have ended ? "

*STUART, J. M. : The Ancient Gold Fields of Africa. . . . London : Printed by the Express Printing Company, Limited. . . . 312 pp. Quarto. 1891.

A compilation containing considerable information respecting the gold fields of Rhodesia and the ancient workings. The article entitled " The Gold in Mashonaland " is from the pen of Major the Hon. D. Erskine, who was for seventeen years Colonial Secretary for Natal, and it contains much interesting matter concerning the early working of gold in South-East Africa. There are also extracts from papers by many writers, a reproduction of Mr. E. A. Maund's address on " Matabele and Mashona Lands " (read at the Royal Geographical Society's Meeting, November 24, 1890), and much interesting matter respecting the occupation of Mashonaland and the rise of the Chartered Company's settlements. At the end of the volume will be found a curious chapter entitled "The Description of Africa," which was written three hundred years ago.

Vol. I. 432 pp. 1845.

Vol. II. 720 pp. 1846.

A voluminous but valuable compilation based on Moodie's Records and the works of many of the early writers on South African matters. The author states that the work was commenced during an excursion to the North-Eastern Districts of South Africa, in the course of which he visited the districts of George, Uitenhage, Albany, Cradock, Graaff-Reinet, and Somerset, and had good opportunities of observing the working of the "Border Police." During his residence on the frontier he collected all the information within his reach, "discussing the subject with the Government authorities, particularly with the Resident agents, Messrs. Stretch and Fynn," and laying under contribution all the records dealing with the matter he was able to consult. He claimed that owing to his researches "a body of evidence has, through this process, been collected in a form and shape which may be of use to any person who may hereafter become the historian of the condition of the aborigines in South Africa, &c. &c." Colonel Sutherland, who was on furlough from India, formed a plan for raising six companies of native troops composed of Amakosa and Tambookie Kaffirs, Fingos, and Hottentots to be stationed at different posts in Kaffraria, and in his "Third Head" he drew up a projected treaty with the Kaffirs amending and augmenting those already existing at this period.

The writer remarks that "the advocates of 'scuttling'" allege that "bad as it may be . . . the Government of the Transvaal is the only form in which civilisation can now be offered to the Swazies." He urges, however, that "All this is mere idle and cowardly talk. Swaziland can perfectly well be governed from Natal, with which it is in every way more closely connected than with the South African Republic."

- *(SYKES, HAROLD PRATT): Diary of the Relief of Mafeking, May, 1900. Printed for private circulation only. 16 pp. 16mo. N.D. circa 1900.

The expedition started from Barkly West on Friday, May 4, 1900, and consisted at first of 900 men, the column being joined at Greifhuts by the commanding officer, Colonel Mahon. On their arrival at Taungs they found the Boers had departed, and the last telegram from them was found in the office, saying, "A cloud of dust and horsemen can be seen advancing from the south, evidently the English. I am going to clear, advise you to do the same." On reaching Thuron's (Theron's) Farm, they discovered many incriminating documents and stolen stores, and most of the farm buildings were destroyed. The enemy were encountered at Brodie's Farm and a brisk engagement ensued, "but Colonel Mahon always kept Mafeking in his eye, and never forgot that his force was sent to relieve Mafeking, and was too small to be frittered away with side issues." Near the Molopo River the expedition was joined by 800 men, and the total force had now increased to 2000 men, with fourteen guns and two maxims. Colonel Mahon's skilful manœuvres had deceived the Boers who had endeavoured to prevent a junction with Colonel Plumer's force, and the enemy were defeated at Israel's farm, about six miles from Mafeking, the column having "completely routed a force three times our numbers in possession round the town." One of the telegrams found in the Boers' laager was from President Kruger, and referred to Eloff's failure to take Mafeking on the previous Saturday, asking, "Why did the attack fail? If through drunkenness it must be kept out of the newspapers." Some severe strictures are passed on the military and civil authorities in Mafeking, as well as upon the inhabitants, for their treatment of the relieving force. It is stated that "Colonel Baden Powell would not allow us to help ourselves in the Boer laagers," and the soldiers "remained in Mafeking a week, all the time on starvation rations. . . . All the time the stores in the town, particularly Weil's, were allowed to sell food to the half-starved troops at such prices as 6s. a tin for sardines, 6s. a lb. tin of jam, &c. &c. . . . Their sole idea seemed to be to make as much of us as they could while we remained." The writer remarks, "The sufferings of the besieged have been very much exaggerated. . . . In fact they seemed to us to be anything but the starved and worn-out garrison they made themselves out to be."

Lady Sykes left for South Africa in November 1899, and after a short stay in Cape Town proceeded to the Roman Catholic Convent in Estcourt, Natal, where she rendered considerable service to the sick and wounded during her stay. The author was in Durban when the German ships Bundesrath and Herzog were seized, and states that it was generally believed that the former was a mere "decoy duck," while the latter possessed "an enormously valuable, and to the English, most dangerous, cargo, all contraband of war. . . . The Herzog was, as all the world now knows, eventually released without even the shadow of an attempt at examination." The generals then in Natal are the subject of much deprecation, and criticism is bestowed on army officials in most departments, the writer referring to the "incompetence of a few over-estimated leaders," and frequently mentioning the desire of the soldiers that Lord Roberts should command the army.

Only fifteen pages of this pamphlet are devoted to the account of the Taal-Congress, the balance containing a record of the second meeting of "Believers," which lasted from the 29th to the 31st of January. The editors of the account do not seem to have been very sure of their spelling, although a dictionary was being started. The Taal word for the month of January is spelt both as Jannewari and Januari.

The publishers state in the Preface that their objects in issuing this work were, firstly, to assist in bringing about uniformity in the spelling of Cape Dutch; secondly, to assist Afrikanders in learning English; and, lastly, to assist English inhabitants of South Africa in learning Cape Dutch. They assert that their aim is to promote co-operation between English and Dutch in South Africa, as "ignorance of each other's language is a fruitful source of misunderstanding and ill-feeling." It is maintained that, out of 16,500 words listed in the dictionary, "1100 are purely Cape Dutch, in so far that they are not found in Dutch dictionaries, or have a different meaning in Dutch."

Louis XIV., King of France, having decided to send an embassy to the King of Siam, with the Chevalier de Chaumont as ambassador, it was thought desirable that the College of Jesuits be applied to, to furnish a party of scholars to accompany the expedition, make scientific investigations and observations, and assist any missionaries they might meet in the course of their travels. Six Jesuit Fathers of high attainments were selected, the author being one of the number, and they sailed with the embassy from Brest on March 3, 1685, arriving at the Cape in the early part of June. Here they were well received by Adriaan van Rheede, the Cape Commissioner sent out by the Dutch East India Company, and Simon Van der Stel, the Governor of the Cape Colony, and were assigned a house in the Company's Gardens, for their accommodation during their visit. Father Tachard was much impressed with the beauty of the plantations, and remarks, "We were mightily surprised to find one of the loveliest and most curious Gardens that ever I saw in a country that looks to be one of the most dismal and barren Places in the World." The Jesuits took careful astronomical notes (being provided with the best instruments of the day), in order to ascertain the true longitude of the Cape, and to rectify "the Hour of the Clock," and to record the difference in time between Paris and Cape Town. They remained at the Cape for about a week, and the author gives an interesting account of the settlement and the natives, mainly compiled from information afforded by Van Rheede, Van der Stel, and Dr. Claudius, who gave him "a little Map made with his own hand, with some figures of the Inhabitants of the Country, and of the rarest Animals, which here (i.e. in this volume) are inserted." It is curious to read of the secret interviews held between the Jesuits and the Catholics of the Cape Colony, who flocked to visit the Fathers in their "little observatory." The Jesuits were not allowed to celebrate the Mass on shore, but their co-religionists came privately to see them; they were "some of all Countries and of all Conditions, Free, Slaves, French, Germans, Portuguese, Spaniards, Flemings, and Indians. They who could no otherwise express themselves, because we understood not their Language, fell upon their knees and kissed our hands. They pulled Chaplets and Medals out of their Bosoms to show that they were Catholics, they wept and smote their Breasts. That language of the Heart, much more touching than words, wrought great Compassion in us. . . . We comforted them the best we could. . . ."

It is observed that "no country is less suited for irregular fighting than the plains about the Orange River," and the writer asserts that if the Boers had been fighting in the south-eastern counties of England, they would have captured nearly the whole of the British army. He states that what was wanted was "an army of British Boers," and it was the business of the nation to insist that their defenders, "on whose training and education as fighters millions are expended yearly, can do everything the Boer can do, and much that he cannot do." There are several portraits of British and Boer Generals, and a number of other illustrations.

Juta & Co., Cape Town, Port Elizabeth, Graham's Town, Johannesburg, Stellenbosch, King William's Town. 16 pp. 8vo. 1899.

The author challenged Mr. Frederick Harrison's statement that "it must be centuries before the rude savages of Central Africa could be brought anywhere near the stage of civilisation of the lowest race of India or China." He considered that the Orange River Free State and the South African Republic were absolutely dependent on Great Britain or any other country which might happen to be the paramount maritime power. He maintained that the interests of all Europeans in South Africa were identical, and remarked that "Africa with its handful of Europeans cannot flourish to much advantage so long as those Europeans tolerate a condition of isolation and of political and trade antagonism between themselves."

*TEMPELHOF, Dr. W. G.: With the Boers round Kimberley. Being a personal narrative of scenes and occurrences in the enemy's laagers during the siege of Kimberley, 1899-1900. By Dr. W. G. Tempelhof, late of Wolmaranstad, and formerly of Beaconsfield. Reprinted from "The Diamond Fields Advertiser." Kimberley: "Diamond Fields Advertiser." . . . 17 pp. 8vo. (1900.)

Dr. Tempelhof, a Prussian, was commandeered by the Transvaal authorities at Wolmaranstad in the early days of the struggle. He asserts that he refused to do military duty but agreed to act as a medical man, provided that his son, who was serving in the Transvaal army, should be exempted from further service and allowed to return to the Doctor's farm. Immediately after the publication of President Kruger's Ultimatum all the burghers in the district of Wolmaranstad were ordered to assemble, and between five and six hundred men left the village to join General Piet Cronje's force, which then amounted to 9000 men, who left Lichtenberg and crossed the boundary line near Mafeking on October 7th and 8th. Here, it is stated, they received a message from Kruger, which Cronje read out, "Gaaf en verneild en God zegene u," i.e. "Go and destroy and God bless you." The author proceeded to Bloemhof and thence to Warrenton and Witpan, where he finally obtained some horses for use, as a medical man under the Geneva Convention. He then joined the headquarters of the Transvaal army, and met with Mr. Pearson (secretary to Piet De La Rey), of whom he gives a very bad account, for his brutal behaviour to the English prisoners.

Some details are given of the battle of Magersfontein, at which the writer was ordered to attend the wounded, being afterwards appointed to the "Intermediate Station" (Waterworks), near Kimberley. Here the Boers were under the command of General Carl Du Toit, and here he met General Jacobus De La Rey, who, he states, was the descendant of a Portuguese nobleman, and who "was hated and feared" by Kruger, of whose policy he was a determined opponent. Dr. Tempelhof remarks that constant information was afforded the Boers as to the military position in Kimberley, the local paper being received twice a week, in addition to more important news not included in that publication. While stationed here a deputation of three members of the Afrikander Bond came into camp asking the Boer General to proclaim Douglas as Republican territory, and this was actually done, two bodies of men being sent down for that purpose. There is an account of the effect produced on the Boers by the big gun made by Mr. Labram at the De Beers Company's works and called "Long Cecil," of the expected advent of which they had received previous notice. The author met Villebois and Sternberg at headquarters, and mention is made of the fact that Villebois' pay was £8. 8s. a day, as Advisory General. Soon after the advent of "Long Cecil," the big Boer gun, "Long Tom," came on the scene, and a severe bombardment of Kimberley was commenced. It is observed that the Rev. Mr. Hofmeyr, formerly the minister of the Dutch Reformed Church at Warrenton, and afterwards sub-editor of the Bloemfontein Express, is said to have pointed out the residence of Mr. Cecil Rhodes to the bombardier, remarking that that gentleman was "the Arch Enemy of the Boers, the author of all the mischief," who "should be killed by all means." It is asserted that a message from Lord Roberts to Kekewich was intercepted, notifying that Kimberley was to be relieved on February 15th, on hearing which Count Sternberg took his leave, remarking to the writer, "Get out of this before the 15th, or else Lord Roberts will drive you out."

To which is subjoined a List of the Civil and Military Establishments at Port Jackson. By Captain Watkin Tench, of the Marines. London: Printed for J. Debrett. . . . viii + 146 pp. 8vo. 1789.

An account of the voyage of the fleet that conveyed the first convicts to Botany Bay. Governor Phillip accompanied the expedition, which consisted of 210 officers and men, and 775 convicts, including men, women, and children. The fleet put into Table Bay for supplies, arriving on October 13, 1787, and a stay of about a month was made. The principal part of the live stock which was to store the intended settlement in Australia was to be procured at the Cape, but Governor Van Graaff only consented to supply a part of the requirements. Captain Tench highly praises Van Graaff's liberality and humanity, though he does not seem to have appreciated the Dutch Governor's political views. The author was informed by Colonel Gordon, commandant of the Dutch troops, that Van Graaff had made repeated efforts "to discover the unfortunate survivors of the crew of the Grosvenor Indiaman," but that "these unhappy people were irrecoverably lost to the world and their friends, by being detained among the Kaffirs, the most savage set of brutes on earth." A short but pleasant description is given of the settlement at the Cape, but Captain Tench evidently considered that the descriptions previously published had been of too flattering a nature. The work has been translated into several languages, and one of the French issues was published with a French version of Paterson's "Four Journeys into the country of the Hottentots and Caffraria," the volume bearing the title of "Voyage dans le Pays des Hottentots, a la Caffrerie, a la Baye Botanique, et dans la Nouvelle Hollande." *TENNANT, Hon. Sir DAVID: The Railway System of South Africa. In "Proceedings of the Royal Colonial Institute," vol. xxix. pp. 1-30. 8vo. 1897.

The speaker was at this period Agent-General for the Cape of Good Hope, and had previously been Speaker of the Legislative Assembly at Cape Town for twenty years. He introduced his subject with a short sketch of the Cape Colony before the first railway was built in 1859, and referred to the fact that for some years the districts specially interested in the railway lines "were subjected to a tax known as the Railway Sub-Guarantee, and this burden was willingly borne until further railway developments assured the country that such a tax was no longer needed." The paper affords particulars of the gradual spread of the system of railways throughout the Colony, and the linking up of the Colonial lines with those of the adjoining Colonies and republics. In the course of the discussion that followed the Hon. J. W. Leonard alluded to the statement made by Sir David Tennant, to the effect that the Cape Railways were earning something like 10 per cent. per annum, a fact which the former considered was "a political crime and injury to all South Africa, but more especially to . . . the Transvaal."

*TENNANT, F. R.: Burghersdorp—50 Years Ago. By F. R. Tennant. Printed and published by Collett & Sharer. . . . Burghersdorp, Cape Colony. 37 pp. Cr. 8vo. 1905.

Reminiscences of the early days of this town, the author, on completing fifty years' residence there, having been asked to publish an account of his experiences. When the writer went to Burghersdorp, it was in its ninth year of existence, and was evidently as crude a specimen of a veld village as could be seen in the interior. Mr. Tennant describes the primitive methods of house-building, sale and barter, &c., then in vogue, with many details respecting the social life of the inhabitants of the district, who appear to have been excessively simple and ignorant. Many quaint anecdotes are related, those referring to the Dutch custom of providing coffins in anticipation of extinction being particularly curious. Reference is made to the serious denudation of the fertile upper surface soil which of late years has been a feature of the country in this district, and it is stated that if this matter is allowed to continue unchecked the whole country "must inevitably become a howling wilderness in the course of a hundred years or so." The pamphlet contains an illustration of "the Albert Academy," and a portrait of the author.

Translated from the Latin Original, printed at Schaffhausen in Switzerland. Ex. "Churchill's Collection of Voyages," vol. iv. pp. 829-845. Folio. 1707.

Ten Rhyne visited the Cape in October 1673, and he gives an account of the natural features of the country in the neighbourhood of Table Bay. Very little is said about the settlement, its government, or the Dutch inhabitants, and the interest of the work centres in the description of the natural history, and an account of the Hottentots, the latter taking up the greater part of the volume. Most of the information was acquired from "Eva," a "Hottentot girl who had been brought up in Mr. Van Riebeeck's household, and who was afterwards married to the Surgeon, Van Neerhof" (see Theal's "History of Africa, 1486-1691"), and the author observes that she was "a civil person, and would discourse very rationally in the Dutch and Portuguese languages, so I learned from her divers secrets relating to this nation." Ten Rhyne formed a very poor opinion of the Hottentots, and remarks, "These barbarous Pagans live without laws . . . they only follow their instinct without control . . . they feed upon dry'd and powder'd skins of Beasts (after they have used them a considerable time instead of shoes) . . . also upon excrements mixed with some other things; this they do without the least distinction of Civility, not excepting even their King, the Head of a Crew of miserable Beggary Wretches, as almost all the Negroes are."

Dr. Florian Albrecht asserts that as the Boers had (in the latter stages of the war) only six doctors in the field, General Botha sent him to Europe to obtain medical assistance from the Red Cross Societies and the Neutral Governments; he remarks, "All the efforts of the Governments and the Red Cross Societies were paralysed by the Malevolence of the English Government."

The Portuguese manuscript was obtained by Captain Owen of H.M.S. Leven, who had it carefully translated into English. There is an account of a visit to "Souldania" (afterwards named Table Bay), where the author arrived on June 12, 1615. There is a curious account of the natives whom Terry called "Coorees," and it is observed "they lodge upon the earth in hovels, so ill covered that they keep not out the weather. . . . These brutes devote themselves to idleness, for they neither dig nor spin . . . the sun shines not upon a people in the whole world more barbarous . . . beasts in the skins of men, as may appear by their ignorance, habit, language, diet ; with other things, which make them most brutish."

Compiled and printed by George M. Theal, Alexandra Road, King William's Town, South Africa. King William's Town. 64 pp. 8vo. 1871.

The first work published by Theal on South Africa. In the advertisement appended to the pamphlet it is stated that it was at first intended to produce a more extensive work of reference, and "as originally prepared it would have been three times as large, but a difficulty arose with regard to printing it. The only press obtainable was an old shattered wooden one, known on the frontier as 'Gutenberg's Original,' and the type, some that was condemned years ago in a newspaper office. . . . Under these circumstances, some chapters on mankind in South Africa were omitted, and the remainder reduced to the smallest compass. Should the public take sufficient interest in a work of this nature to warrant the expenditure, suitable printing material will be procured from England, and the whole, together with the latest statistical information, published about the end of the present year." One of the most curious items in this interesting publication is the article headed "Adamanta," giving an early account of the Diamond Fields, in which it is stated that the diggings cover "portions of the Transvaal Republic, the Orange Free State, Betjunaland, Griqualand, and the Cape Colony. The diggers rule themselves. . . . A British Commissioner has recently been appointed to look after the British interests and British subjects at the fields; but the prestige of his name and office is the only power at his command. The Free State Government is recognised at the Pniel diggings, but at Bultfontein, which is Free State territory, the diggers treat the Dutch republican Government with the most sovereign contempt."

The first of Theal's more important historical works, and the most complete publication of the kind issued up to date. The author remarks ("History of South Africa, 1834-54") that the information afforded in these editions "was derived from blue-books, printed books on South Africa, intercourse with colonists, Kaffir traditions, and knowledge obtained while editing a newspaper," and goes on to say, since they were published "I have been almost constantly engaged in researches in the manuscript archives of this country, and in consequence of the knowledge gained am now obliged to pronounce my own former work defective and incorrect in many respects." The account of the "Colony of Griqualand West" contains an interesting narrative of the occurrences in this part of South Africa up to this period, and Mr. Theal expresses his views on the subject of the dispute between Great Britain and the Orange Free State as to the possession of the Diamond Fields in the following terms: "The Government of the Free State complained of the proceeding (of the British Government), but it was in accordance with precedents in Transgariepine history. The Emigrant Farmers, in days gone by, had taken upon themselves to decide who was the rightful owner of the land they desired to purchase, and usually their verdict was in favour of the one who offered to sell it at the cheapest rate. The High Commissioner had done exactly the same thing."

Mr. Theal observes in his Preface that the chapters referring to early

Kaffir history will be found more complete in this edition than in the first. "Kaffir names are spelt in this book as they would be by an educated native, so as to give the correct sound of the words."

Mr. Theal states that "The Council of Policy at the Cape was subject to the control of the Governor-General and Council of India as well as of the Chamber of Seventeen. . . . The particulars for this work were collected by the author during twenty years' intercourse with the Kaffir people in a variety of capacities, ranging from a mission teacher to a border magistrate. Most of the tales have, it is stated, already appeared in South African papers and magazines, and show considerable imaginative faculties on the part of the natives, while affording much information with regard to their religion, customs, and government. Mr. Theal asserts that the best narrators were almost invariably ancient dames, and the time chosen for story-telling always the evening. "The Story of Hlakanyana" bears, in part of the recital, a strong resemblance to "The House that Jack built," also to the "Chad Gadyu," in the "Hagadah" (Jewish Passover Service). There is a chapter on "Native Proverbs and Figurative Expressions," together with several notes on the tales, all of which show careful research and study on the part of the author. It was intended to publish the volume at Lovedale in 1877, but although the first sheet had already been printed, the issue had to be postponed in consequence of a native rising and other matters for five years. A second edition was published in 1886.

*THEAL, GEORGE McCALL: Chronicles of Cape Commanders, or an abstract of original manuscripts in the Archives of the Cape Colony, dating from 1651 to 1691, compared with printed accounts of the settlement by various visitors during that time. Also four short papers upon subjects connected with the East India Company's Government at a later period, reprinted from colonial periodicals, and notes on English, Dutch, and French books published before 1796, containing references to South Africa. By George McCall Theal. . . . With four charts. Cape Town: W. A. Richards & Sons. . . . xiv+428 pp. 8vo. 1882.

The first chapter serves as an introduction to the history of the Cape Colony, and is followed by a narrative of the rise and progress of the settlements under Van Riebeeck, Wagenaar, Goske, Bax, Crudorp, and Simon Van Der Stel, together with instructive chapters on the exploration and discoveries in South Africa during this period, and details respecting the arrival and settlement of the Huguenots, and other interesting information. Nearly the whole of the volume is devoted to the history of the Cape in the seventeenth century, but at the end of the work will be found four papers dealing with matters concerning the eighteenth century, which include "A few leaves in the Stellenbosch Records," "A glance at the Old Records of Swellendam," "Ryk Tulbagh, a brief sketch of the life of a good and great man," and "A hundred years ago. A sketch of events in South Africa in the year 1781."

In referring to the desire of "Various persons in Europe and in this country" for "a list of all known printed books" relating to South Africa, Dr. Theal observes, "The difficulties in the way of drawing it up are, however, so considerable that at best it can only be done imperfectly." The notes in these articles have been reproduced in the "History of South Africa," but in some cases these have been abbreviated.

- *THEAL, GEORGE McCALL: Basutoland Records. Copies of official documents of various kinds, accounts of travellers, &c. Collected and arranged by order of the Honourable J. W. Vol. III. lxxiv+894 pp. 1862-1868.

Cape Town: W. A. Richardson & Sons. . . . 8vo. 1883.

This compilation comprises a collection of documents affording an almost complete history of everything connected with Basutoland from 1833-1868, and the compiler states ("History of South Africa, 1834-1854") that a further volume "was in readiness for the printer, when the Cape Colony was relieved of the administration of Basutoland, and a continuation of the work was not needed" for the purposes of the Cape Government, who had directed the publication of the records. "The volumes printed contain everything in the Archives of the Cape Colony, the Orange Free State, and the Paris evangelical missionary society" relating to the territory during this period, "besides many extracts from newspapers and accounts of travellers."

- *THEAL, GEORGE McCALL: Boers and Bantu: a history of the wanderings and wars of the emigrant farmers, from their leaving the Cape Colony to the overthrow of Dingan. By George McCall Theal. (Reprinted from "South African Illustrated News.") Cape Town: Saul Solomon & Co. . . . 128 pp. 16mo. 1886.

The first two chapters deal with the history, habits, and customs of the Kaffirs, the wars and depredations of the Zulus and Matabels, and the successful defence of their country by the Basutos. The remainder of the volume is devoted to an account of the causes of the Great Trek, the wanderings, misadventures, battles, and settlements of the Trek Boers, and the establishment of the Republic of Natal by Pretorius in 1840, together with notes of the proceedings of the early British settlers.

- *THEAL, GEORGE McCALL: A Fragment of Basuto History, 1854-1871. By George McCall Theal. . . . (Reprinted from "Cape Mercantile Advertiser.") Cape Town: Saul Solomon and Co. . . . 188 pp. 16mo. 1886.

Practically a condensation of "Basutoland Records" (published in 1883). The introductory chapter, containing fifty-four pages, has, it is stated, been reprinted, with trifling additions, from the introduction to the third volume of the earlier work. It is stated that the political life of Basutoland appears to have been completely influenced by the proximity of the Orange Free State: there were constant quarrels and border fights between the inhabitants of the two countries, and the intrigues and disputes appear to have been interminable. Congresses and meetings of the chiefs of Basutoland and delegates from the Volksraad seem generally to have left matters in much the same state as before the discussions, and the Orange Free State was evidently too weak for its turbulent neighbour, especially when it was ruled by so cunning and able a chief as Moshesh. Indeed that astute warrior appears to have been fully aware of the weakness of the Republic, of whose threats and menaces he does not seem to have taken any notice, although he was careful to keep on good terms with the British. A condensed account of the disputes is given, together with a short historical sketch of the Orange Free State and its wars with Basutoland. The Boers, while unable to defend themselves against tribal aggressions, were ever agitating to obtain more and more country from the Basutos, on the ground of previous right of possession. They were successful, to a certain extent, in the 1865-8 campaign, but it does not appear at all certain that they would have been able to maintain order among the Basuto chiefs, or successfully keep peace throughout the country. They bitterly resented the action of Great Britain, however, in taking Basutoland under its protection, and alleged that they were robbed of the fair results of their victories. After much discussion and negotiation a boundary line was arrived at, and a convention ratified by the Volksraad on May 5, 1869. On November 3, 1871, Basutoland was formally annexed to the Cape Colony by an Order in Council confirmed by Queen Victoria. Ten years later the native rebellion of 1880-81 necessitated other arrangements for the government of the country, which was finally transferred to the Imperial authorities in 1884.

*THEAL, GEORGE McCALL: The Republic of Natal. The Origin of the Present Pondo Tribe. Imperial treaties with Panda, and establishment of the Colony of Natal. By George McCall Theal. . . . (Reprinted from "Cape Mercantile Advertiser.") Cape Town: Saul Solomon & Co. . . . 69 pp. 16mo. 1886.

This little short-lived Republic was set up by the Emigrant Farmers in the country between the Drakensberg and the sea, and was one of the most curious forms of government the world has ever witnessed. There was a Volksraad of twenty-four members, but matters of great importance were left to the decision of "The Public," and the result of this most extraordinary system was "utter anarchy. Decisions of one day were frequently reversed the next, and every one held himself free to disobey any law of which he did not approve." The nature of the government is best exemplified by the instructions given to two commissioners sent to the Cape to treat for "an acknowledgment of their independence, with the rights of British subjects," and to enter into "a perpetual alliance with the Government of Her Majesty." Particulars are given of the negotiations, disputes, and the final notification that the Burghers could not be recognised "until they distinctly acknowledged their full and entire allegiance as British subjects." There is an account of the military occupation of Natal by Captain Smith, his siege at Durban by the Boers, his relief by Colonel Cloete, the retreat of the Burghers, and the recognition of the British Government by the Volksraad.

*THEAL, GEORGE McCALL: History of the Boers in South Africa, or, the wanderings and wars of the emigrant farmers from their leaving the Cape Colony to the acknowledgment of their independence by Great Britain. By George McCall Theal. . . . With

xxiv + 392 pp. 8vo. 1887.

It is claimed that the volume is the first publication which has been issued dealing specially with "the emigration of the Boers from the Cape Colony, and the establishment of the two Republics in the Interior of South Africa." The introductory chapters deal with the native races of the Cape and their rulers, and these are followed by an account of the Great Trek and of the settlements of the Boers, and their wars with the natives and the British, the scope of the work extending to the establishment of the republic of Natal and its supersession, and the foundation of the Orange Free State and the South African Republic. Mr. Theal observes in the Preface, "Regarding the acts of various missionaries, there is certainly a difference between the tone of this volume and my 'Compendium of South African History,' written sixteen years ago. I had not then read the mass of missionary correspondence in the colonial records, nor the comments upon their complaints and the refutation of many of their statements made by officers of the Colonial Government. But no one will find a word in this volume condemnatory of missionary work properly so called, for no one can be more favourably disposed towards it than I am."

xix + 430 pp. 8vo. 1888. 5 Vols. 8vo. 1888-1900.

This volume deals with the period which, starting from the discovery of the Cape by Diaz, extends to the time of the Governorship of Simon Van Der Stel, and covers the establishment of the colony under the Dutch East India Company, and its progressive development up to the year 1691. The author states that during the twenty years preceding the issue of this volume he had published numerous fragments of South African history in books, pamphlets, and magazine articles, and that this work is adapted from the book published in Cape Town in 1882 under the title of "Chronicles of Cape Commanders," by enlarging some of the chapters, and cutting out matter having no reference to the period 1486-1691. The first chapter deals with the various expeditions relating to the discovery of the Cape, and the subsequent visits paid to the country by Vasco da Gama, Saldanha, D'Almeida, Linschoten, Fitzherbert and Shillinge, Spilbergen, and others, and the formation and constitution of the "United Netherlands Chartered East India Company," and succeeding chapters give details of the pioneer work of Jan Van Riebeeck and his successors. The narrative portrays, from time to time, the somewhat equivocal ethics of the Cape Governors and the "Dutch Council of 17" who ruled the destinies of the new colony, and who were certainly not above misleading Europeans, as well as natives, for their own purposes, and it is stated that during a rising of the Hottentots the local council decided to make use of a prisoner of that race "as a guide to the secret retreats of his countrymen. For that purpose they decided to offer him great rewards, but they placed on record that they had no intention of fulfilling their promises." In paying the Hottentots for the country about the Cape in 1672, they gave Prince Schacher goods to the value of £2. 16s. 5d., in lieu of the settled amount of 4000 reals of eight (£800), and a similar payment to the minor chief Dhouw was settled by a delivery of goods valued at £6. 16s. 4d. With regard to such transactions, the author remarks of Van Riebeeck that "his religion did not prevent him from acting falsely and treacherously whenever there was an immediate gain to be made by a falsehood or a treacherous act. Perhaps this was rather a vice of the age than of the man. . . . Nor did any of the Directors, or Commissioners, or Indian authorities, ever pen a line of censure on account of such doings." Besides a full account of the Cape Governors up to 1691, the volume contains particulars of the installation of the Huguenots, lists of the burghers of the Cape District, Stellenbosch, and Drakenstein, a catalogue of authorities consulted by the author, and many early statistics of the country.

Vol. II. xvii + 419 pp. (1691-1795.) 8vo. 1888.

This section contains the history of South Africa from the last ten years of Simon Van Der Stel's term of office down to the date of the capture of the Cape under General Craig. Adriaan Van Der Stel was by no means as popular as his father, and the constant complaints made against him finally resulted in his removal from office. There can be little doubt that the burghers laboured under many hardships, political and natural, and as Mr. Theal remarks, "There has never been a people less inclined to submit to grievances real or imaginary than the colonists of South Africa." Governor Tulbagh, however, appears to have given complete satisfaction to the colonists as well as to the Council of 17, but even he had to threaten to flog a woman before she would obey the Government and have her children educated. Want of unskilled labour brought the slavery question into prominence during the term of office as Governor of Mr. N. P. de Chavonnes; the matter was brought before the local council, and all the members, with the exception of Captain Dominique Pasques de Chavonnes, were in favour of slave labour. The latter officer, who commanded the garrison, advocated the introduction of European workmen only, and Mr. Theal remarks that, "It must ever be deplored that of the men who sat in the council in February 1717, there was but one who could look beyond the gains of the present hour." It is interesting to note that Van Riebeeck, sixty years previously, had unsuccessfully advocated the introduction of Chinese to meet the demand for labourers. Some time after, in Governor Tulbagh's term of office, a very severe and drastic slave code was drawn up and promulgated, but it must be admitted that the Governor did his best to combat the luxurious habits which were undermining the spirit of the descendants of the sturdy pioneers, whose effeminate grandchildren were not content unless they could "be waited upon by menials." The first expedition sent by the British against the Cape sailed on March 13, 1781, but the French sent a fleet to the assistance of the Dutch; the rival squadrons fought at Porto Prayo, and although the action was indecisive, the French fleet and some transports were enabled to reach Table Bay, and the British were foiled in their attack. In 1795 another fleet was sent out bearing instructions from the Prince of Orange to place the Cape under the protection of the British: this decision was contested by the Cape burghers under Sluysken, but the Dutch were hopelessly outnumbered and had to submit.

Vol. III. (1795-1834.) With seven charts. London: Swan Sonnenschein & Co. . . . xii + 488 pp. 8vo. 1891.

The British authorities endeavoured with considerable success to soothe the Dutch colonists at the Cape, and assured them that "they would presently be in the enjoyment of such liberty and good fortune as they had never known before." Gradually peace was restored all over the country, and after Admiral Elphinstone had captured a Dutch fleet sent to retake the colony, the British were left in peaceful possession. "General Craig did his utmost to place British rule before the colonists in as favourable light as possible," and the home authorities sent an able Governor, the Earl of Macartney, to act as their first administrator in South Africa. There was an insurrection at Graaff-Reinet in 1798, but, generally speaking, the country was settling down, when it was arranged that it should be handed back to the Batavian Government, an event which took place on February 20, 1803. General Janssens did his best to put the country in a state of defence, but when the country was again invaded his best troops had already been withdrawn, and he admitted "that victory was almost hopeless, and before long he had placed on record his fixed conviction that the Cape Colony was too great a burden to be borne by the exhausted mother country." The colonial troops had never the remotest prospect of success, and after one or two minor engagements, the settlements were surrendered to Great Britain. Before leaving for Europe, General Janssens sent a letter to General Baird commending the inhabitants of the colony to his care, at the same time warning him not to put too much belief in Mr. Barrow's attacks on the colonists. The country rapidly settled down again under the rule of the Earl of Caledon; it is stated that he "was well disposed towards the colonists, and in return they thought highly of him." Sir John Cradock, his successor, was, according to the author, "as upright and amiable a man as ever ruled this country." During his government occurred the episode known as the "Black Circuit," and the results of the exaggerated charges of the missionaries against the Dutch colonists left traces on the history of the country which have not yet been eradicated. Lord Charles Somerset, the next Governor, though active and resolute for the welfare of the colony, was arbitrary and self-opiniated. In his term of office the settlements at Albany were established, and there is a good account of the 1820 settlers. A less pleasing episode was the insurrection of Bezeidenhout which culminated in the "Slachter's Nek" tragedy; the sentences passed were strictly justified, although, as Mr. Theal says, "banishment would have been equally effective." Later on, the complaints against Lord Charles Somerset became frequent and severe, and although charges of corruption could not be proved against him, his rule was characterised as despotic in the extreme, and he resigned in 1827; Sir Lowry Cole, his successor, was an able and popular Governor. Slavery was abolished under Sir B. D'Urban, but much distress and dissatisfaction resulted, owing to the manner in which the regulations for the abolition were carried out.

Vol. IV. From the foundation of the European Settlement to our own times. (1834-1854.) With six maps. London: Swan Sonnenschein & Co. . . . 8vo. 1893.

Much of this volume is taken up by an account of the sixth and seventh Kaffir Wars which extended over a period during which the colony was ruled by Sir B. D'Urban, Major-Gen. Napier, Sir P. Maitland, Sir H. Pottinger, and Sir Harry Smith. There are some chapters on the Great Trek, Mr. Theal observing, "No single event brought on the emigration, but causes of disaffection had been accumulating ever since 1811." There is an account of the various settlements in Natal, and of the final decision of the British Government to bring the colony under its authority, and the Rule of the Republic to a close. There is also a full description of the formation of the two Boer Republics, their wars, and their struggles, together with an account of the battle of Boomplatz, the annexation of the Free State, and its subsequent retrocession six years after the establishment of the Orange River Sovereignty. The volume contains notes on a large number of works relating to the period embraced, and possesses an ample index, and a number of maps and charts.

(Vol. V.) The Republics and Native Territories from 1854-1872. With a chart. Second Edition. London: Swan Sonnenschein & Co. . . . xv+448 pp. 8vo. 1900.

"In this volume the history of the Emigrant Farmers is traced from the abandonment of the Orange River Sovereignty to the reversal by Great Britain of the policy of withdrawal from the interior of South Africa." The contents include a narrative of events in the Orange Free State and the South African Republic up to the year 1872, with particulars regarding the disputes between the two Republics, the wars of the Orange River Free State with the Corannas and Bataplins, and an account of the events which terminated in the annexation of the diamond fields by the British. Mr. Theal remarks, "Not a few people believe that the annexation of the diamond fields to the British dominions was a political necessity, and defend it on that ground. Had a declaration been made to that effect by the High Commissioner in 1871, the argument might have been tenable; but the annexation was effected on a very different plea. The subject is a very delicate one to deal with, and I have therefore quoted the leading official documents, in preference to giving their substance in my own words."

An interesting collection of valuable papers. The publication of the Journey of Governor Joachim van Plettenberg, and the narrative of Beutler, caused some misunderstanding between Messrs. Theal and Leibbrandt which is referred to in a "note to the reader" in "Resolutiën van den Commandeur en Raden van het Fort de Goede Hoop, 1652-1662" (see LEIBBRANDT, H. C. VOS). The volume contains some valuable accounts of early visits to Delagoa Bay.

- *THEAL, GEORGE McCALL: The Portuguese in South Africa. With a description of the Native Races between the River Zambesi and the Cape of Good Hope during the sixteenth century. By George McCall Theal, LL.D. . . . With Maps. London: T. Fisher Unwin. . . . xvi + 324 pp. 8vo. 1896.

Mr. Theal states that "mainly through the ability of one man—the Right Hon. C. J. Rhodes," South Africa, which at one time during his career as an author only extended to south of the Limpopo, to-day extends to south of the Zambesi. The first two chapters of the work are devoted to a description of the native races of South Africa, i.e., the Bushmen, the Hottentots, and the Bantus, and there is a detailed account of the voyages of the Portuguese navigators from the earliest days, and of their experiences with the inhabitants of the African countries they visited. The author comments on the general degeneration of the Portuguese after their residence in South Africa, which he attributes to their habit of consorting with native women. It is asserted that the establishment of the Dutch East India Company put the coping stone on the ruin of Portuguese influence in South Africa, and Mr. Theal states that the Company had the nominal capital of £549,183. 6s. 8d., and paid dividends averaging over 20 per cent. for a century. It never succeeded in acquiring the Portuguese territories in South-East Africa, although all Portuguese Government projects were withdrawn about 1622, and their influence in the country ceased for the time being to have any importance, but in the nineteenth century the ever increasing value of Delagoa Bay, together with the establishment of the railway to the Transvaal, serve to show that, in the words of the author, "the prospects of Portuguese South Africa seem brighter to-day than at any previous time since Pedro de Nhaya built the first fort on the river bank of Sofala."

Fifth impression (fourth edition). (The Story of Nations.) London: T. Fisher Unwin. . . . xx+442 pp. 8vo. 1899.

It is stated that the chapters upon "the Cape Colony before 1848, Natal before 1845, and the Orange Free State, South African Republic, Zululand, and Basutoland before 1872, contain" an outline of the "History of South Africa," in five volumes, previously published by the same author. The remaining chapters of the work were written "merely from general acquaintance with South African affairs, acquired during many years' residence in the country." In the second and third editions of this work,

“a supplementary chapter was inserted, in which were recorded the chief events that occurred from September 1893 to the dates of issue.” In order to bring the present impression up to date (February 1897), the last five chapters of the publication have been enlarged and rewritten, Mr. Theal remarking, “In preparing the book I was guided by the principle, that truth should be told regardless of nationalities or parties, and I strove to the utmost to avoid anything like favour or prejudice.”

This little volume, which has passed through several editions, was issued for the use of schools, &c. &c., and “on this account its language was adapted for children.” In this edition the statistics are brought down to the year 1900, and a chapter has been added on the “Origin of the South African War” (1899-1902).

This publication, to a great extent, is a synopsis of the history of the country during this period, and the compiler observes that the volume contains “the indisputable truths of South African History. . . . As far as human power goes, it is absolutely free of partisan spirit. As a Canadian of loyalist descent, “I naturally wish to see the extension and solidification of the Empire where that can take place without wrong or injustice to others, but I have not allowed that feeling to bias my work.”

Practically an amended and extended edition of the work entitled “The Portuguese in South Africa,” with additional notes on the remains of Palæolithic Man in South Africa, and a very greatly amplified description of the Bantu races. Much of the work has been entirely rewritten, and the eight chapters in the earlier publication have been increased to twenty in the new version. The scope of the volume has been extended to the arrival of D’Anaya in Sofala in 1505, a period 150 years before the arrival of Van Riebeeck, which was taken “as an initial point” in “The Portuguese in South Africa.” The work contains photographic reproductions of an ancient plan of Sofala and the “Baptism of the Monomotapa,” the latter having been taken from a picture in the Dominican House, Rome.

Vol. III. Account of the Dutch, Portuguese, Hottentots, and Bantu to September 1795. xiii + 499 pp.

3 Vols. 8vo. 1910.

The author remarks, "In this, the third, edition of my History of South Africa, before the Conquest of the Cape Colony by Great Britain in September 1795, I have added so largely to the information previously given concerning the Bushmen . . . the Hottentots, and particularly the Bantu Immigrants, that I think it right to alter the old title by inserting the words 'and Ethnography' in it."

Mr. Theal pays a tribute to the assistance and encouragement he received in his literary career from Mr. J. W. Sauer, Mr. C. J. Rhodes, Sir Gordon Sprigg, Sir Bartle Frere, Sir George Grey, Lord Loch, and President Sir John Brand, and observes, "President and Governors and Mr. Rhodes are all now in the silent land, where my voice of thanks can no longer reach them, but to their memories what I have said is due. . . . I avoided politics most carefully in order that my narrative should be absolutely unbiassed, but they all approved of my motives and did what they could to forward my work."

This edition comprises Series II. of the History of South Africa, Series I. including the volumes distinguished by the title "History and Ethnography of Africa South of the Zambesi." Dr. Theal says that the History of South Africa has occupied his "almost undivided attention during the last forty years." The volumes differ somewhat in arrangement from the previous editions, and considerable additions have been made, more especially with regard to the two Republics and the native territories.

It is stated that "the disease was originally called Rhodesian Red-water. . . . An improvement in the nomenclature was the words Rhodesian Tick Fever; a still better name is East Coast Fever." A full description of the disease is given, including its geographical distribution and history, morbid conditions, pathology, incubation, course and nature of the disease, susceptibility of the different breeds of cattle, immunity, and inoculation and treatment. It is observed that "all attempts to cure sick animals have so far failed," but "when suitable dipping material is used and the operation properly carried out the infection is retarded."

This address purports to give the aims of the Afrikander Bond, and points out the duties of the members, and was given in the early years of the association by the then Secretary, Mr. T. P. Theron, who afterwards became the President, and a powerful member of the institution. According to his statement, the Bond was at the time of his speech "a despised, reviled, and slandered" body, but the speaker prophesied a time when its power would be felt throughout South Africa. He compared the political status of the Afrikaner before the foundation of the organisation with his position at the time of speaking, and asserted that even in a short period much had been done in rousing the Boer farmers from their apathy in political matters. He detailed the circumstances under which the "Farmers' Protection Association" united with the Afrikaner Bond in order to form a more powerful and united institution, and asserts that the Rev. S. J. Du Toit, Chief Justice (afterwards President) Reitz, and Mr. Borckenhagen were the founders of the Bond in the Cape Colony and the Free State. The principal object of the body was stated to be expressed in Section 5 of the General Constitution, which is to the effect that "The nearest object of the Bond is a formation of a South African Nationality by means of union and co-operation, as a preparation for the ultimate object, a united South Africa. The Bond tries to attain this object by constitutional means, giving to the respective governments and legislations all the support they are entitled (to) and respecting everybody's rights." Allusion is made to the "privileges of a free constitution, the gift of their honoured Queen," and it is remarked that "they (the Afrikaners) have recovered the sense of nationality which strangers had well-nigh extinguished." The pamphlet is noteworthy as expressing the early views of a well-known Afrikaner leader, but it is to be observed that, with characteristic caution, Mr. Theron stated at the very outset of his remarks that he had "made a point of omitting whatever might give offence."

Revenge for the Transvaal. Germany's Lamentation, and Programme for the Future. By Peter John Thiel, Business Manager of the Society for the Elevation of Domestic Life, Elberfeld.

A pamphlet calling down vengeance on the British on account of "the barbarous and horrible deeds . . . inflicted by Lord Roberts upon the wretched land of the Boers, in defiance of all the usages of war . . . for the atrocious burning of innumerable farm-houses, whose inhabitants—innocent wives, children, and hoary-headed old people—were thrust out of their homes on fearful winter nights, without bread or shelter, because their husbands, fathers, and sons, in defence of their country, had cut off the retreat of the enemy, using methods sanctioned by the customs of war."

Germans are invited to do everything in their power to humiliate England, while the Boers and Afrikaners are entreated to "turn to Germany," and establish "the United States of South Africa combined with German South-West Africa," with whose development "the first stage in the downfall of Albion's rule in South Africa" would be brought about.

The Boer War. With short biographies of the most distinguished generals, communicated by His Excellency the Transvaal Ambassador, Dr. W. Leyds. Edited by Dr. Ludwig Thoma, with the co-operation of Professor Franz von Defregger, &c. &c. &c.

The most abominable caricature in this publication is one on page 24 by Th. Th. Heine, entitled "Heldenverehrung" (Hero-worship). It depicts "English Princesses decorating the youngest soldier in the British Army with the Victoria Cross, for having already, at the age of thirteen years, violated eight Boer women"; Queen Victoria and the Prince of Wales (Edward VII.) stand approving in the background. Another cartoon represents the Prince of Wales in a state of intoxication whilst receiving Joseph Chamberlain, who reports the news of Cronje's surrender.

This work, which has every appearance of having been issued by responsible publishers, is characteristic of a class of literature and art which was evidently popular in Germany during the South African War.

It is asserted that "about thirty years ago . . . a well-informed, influential, and unscrupulous coterie in Holland devised the fell projects which developed into that potential association since known as the Afrikaner (Afrikander) Bond, . . . the Dutch patriot mourning over the transition of former national prestige . . . pitting against the English his almost forgotten clan, the Boer nation, inciting them to usurp Great Britain in South Africa, Holland sharing the spoils." The aims and methods of the Bond are described by the author, who maintains that they included the habitual "attitude of holding aloof from English influences," the support of the paramount use of the Dutch language, the discouragement of marriages between the English and Dutch as being unpatriotic, the arming of every Afrikaner with the best possible weapons, the employment solely of "teachers . . . who are animated with truly patriotic sentiments," and while preserving absolute independence, the favouring of Holland "for a domestic base" with regard to "the ties of blood relationship and language."

Separate articles deal with the Cape Colony, Natal, the Transvaal, Orange River Colony and Basutoland, Bechuanaland, and Rhodesia, and special chapters are devoted to the natives and the Boers. Of the latter, it is remarked that, "with all their defects," they are "a steadying element in South Africa; an element which will become more appreciated in the future than it is now. . . . The Boer is not doomed to extinction, or to play a minor part in the administration of the country. He has qualities of great determination. . . . Although slow in his nature, he has immense vitality. . . . But as things move on, so will the Boer move on. . . . To make him see what is to his advantage is the task of those who are interested in or responsible for the people and future of South Africa. Yes. The Boer is well worth watching—in more senses than one—and all the time."

With portrait, map, and numerous illustrations. London : John Snow and Co. . . . Cardiff : James Wood. . . . xi + 418 pp. 8vo. 1872.

Sailing for South Africa in June 1858, the author and his companions were welcomed on their arrival at Cape Town by Messrs. Moffat and Thompson, and a few weeks later started with the Rev. Mr. Helmore for the Interior. They made their way to Hope Town, and subsequently to Griqua Town, where Mr. Thomas was at first stationed. The latter gives some particulars of the discovery and the early days of the diamond fields, and in referring to the disputes about the ownership of the country, mentions a meeting which took place between Presidents Pretorius and Brand and the native chiefs, Tantje and Waterboer, in September 1870, to determine who was the real owner of the district, and remarks, "They all claimed it; and although there was no doubt in the minds of those acquainted with its history that the ownership belonged to Tantje and Waterboer, still the stronger white claimants would have taken possession had not the weaker ones appealed to the English Government for help." Later on, Mr. Thomas resided in Kuruman, Kanye, Shoshong, and Inyati, and his narrative affords many particulars respecting the natural history and fauna of these regions, together with some exciting lion adventures, and much interesting information concerning the natives. Mr. Thomas was present at the coronation of Lobengula, and gives a graphic account of the ceremonies, with some curious illustrations representing the King and his attendants, &c. The volume is one of the earliest works dealing with Matabeleland, and gives one of the best descriptions of the country and its natives, nearly a quarter of a century before its occupation by the British.

It is remarked, however, that it is "useless to send to South Africa a man or woman whose comfort depends on luxurious surroundings of home life, and who will never cease to grumble when difficulties arise." Amongst the places most highly recommended for invalids are, Graham's Town, Graaff-Reinet, Aliwal North, Tarkastad, and Burghersdorp; Cape Town and Bloemfontein are condemned for their bad sanitary arrangements.

This valuable work was written by a Cape Town merchant who resided in South Africa for many years, and who had travelled throughout the greater part of the Cape Colony and a considerable part of Bechuanaland, "partly from motives of business, partly from the impulse of curiosity." In 1821, Mr. Thompson made a six weeks' excursion to Albany "to examine into the prospects of the British emigrants . . . and to ascertain what branches of trade might be most successfully extended in that direction," and on this occasion he visited Port Elizabeth ("then a hamlet of only three or four houses"), Uitenhage, Graham's Town, Bathurst, George, and many other districts and settlements, and his clear, unbiassed, and shrewd comments throw considerable light on the state of affairs in South Africa at this period. In 1823 and 1824 he proceeded to the Orange River and Bechuanaland, and his account of these regions is recognised as the most important description of this part of the continent published in the early part of the nineteenth century. The third division of the work comprises a review of the condition "of the Dutch and British inhabitants, of the agricultural, commercial, and financial circumstances of the country and of its adaptation for further colonisation." The author observes that Mr. Barrow's account of the Cape Dutch Boers was "a powerful but somewhat overdrawn picture—the features that he portrayed were real;—but the delineation was, nevertheless, an unfair representation of the colonists, because the traveller had only seen them under an unfavourable aspect. . . . Dr. Lichtenstein, on the other hand, appears to have been led by political opposition and other causes to contradict Mr. Barrow's account, on many occasions without just cause. . . . The truth seems to lie between these conflicting accounts. . . . That the back-country Boers of former times were many of them as savage, indolent, and unprincipled as Mr. Barrow has described, cannot be questioned . . . to this day, some of them are in no respect improved. But even the Vee-Boers in general have many good and pleasing qualities . . . the very rudest class of the Cape Boers seem to be in many respects superior to the half-savage back settlers in almost every quarter of the Spanish or Anglo-American colonies." The work contains a number of excellent engravings, some of which were contributed by the naturalist Wehdemann, and others by Mr. De Meillon and Dr. Heurtley: there are plans of Cape Town and Graaff-Reinet, a map of South Africa showing the author's route, and an Appendix containing reproductions of valuable articles from the South African Journal and other sources.

*THOMPSON, GEO. CARSLAKE: The Country and the War. A paper read at a meeting of the Cardiff Impartial Society, March 5th, 1900. With an added chapter on the question of the Suzerainty. By George Carslake Thompson, LL.M., of the Inner Temple, Barrister-at-Law. Cardiff: Published by "Western Mail," Limited. 51 pp. 8vo. 1900.

A discussion of the Anglo-Boer question. The speaker thought that we ought to "get rid of any notion to the effect that a man who, at this juncture, thinks England is in the wrong, is necessarily unpatriotic," and he considers it impossible to solve the problem "by the sweeping maxim—'our country, right or wrong.'" He was, however, of the opinion that "The discontent and unrest in the Transvaal . . . endangered the peace and prosperity of the whole of South Africa." He drew attention to the fact that the well-known phrase "pariahs and helots," as designating the Uitlanders, was not first used by Sir Alfred Milner, but by Mr. J. W. Leonard at a mass meeting of the Transvaal National Union at Johannesburg on July 14, 1899. Regarding the Suzerainty question, reference is made to Lord Derby's speech in the House of Lords on March 14, 1884, when the latter said, "Whatever Suzerainty meant in the Convention of Pretoria, the condition of things which it implied still remains; although the word is not actually employed, we kept the substance." It is also stated that the Transvaal Deputation "wished to have an article in the new convention expressly abolishing suzerainty," vide their letter to Lord Derby, dated February 5, 1884, and it is pointed out that no such article was included in the convention.

Cape Town: Saul Solomon & Co. . . . 52 pp. 16mo. 1878.

The speaker claimed to give a just and dispassionate statement of the native question without encroaching upon Imperial or Colonial politics, and he stated that the missionaries of the Kat River settlement were misjudged, and should never have been regarded as apologists for crime among the natives. He trusted that the Kaffirs would accept their altered position, for their own sake, as well as for the white races, as "nothing is more to be deprecated . . . than a war of races." Regarding the conduct of the war, it is asserted that "some names have attained an unenviable notoriety, and their possessors appear to have been dead to every feeling of humanity and justice."

*THOMSON, H. C.: Rhodesia and its Government. . . . With illustrations. London: Smith, Elder & Co. . . . xi+352 pp. 8vo. 1898.

Mr. Thomson is a severe critic of the Chartered Company, which he says "as a government, has no claim to indulgence." He maintains that "it has given cause for suspicion to the Boers, to the Portuguese, and to the neighbouring native states, and it has cruelly wronged and oppressed those natives who have been placed under its control. . . . For these things Mr. Rhodes is directly responsible." He considers that the causes of the rebellion in Matabeleland and Mashonaland were the maladministration of affairs in the country, the appointment of native police, the irritation caused by the shooting of the natives' cattle owing to rinderpest regulations, and to the reality of forced labour imposed upon the native races. It is asserted that the natives said, "Our country is gone, our cattle have gone, our people have scattered, we have nothing to live for . . . we are the slaves of the white man, we are nobody, and have no rights or laws of any kind. . . . Could there be," asks the author, "a sadder commentary upon the results of our occupation of Matabeleland?" Nevertheless, it is maintained that "the failure of the Company to govern rightly has not been wilful, but has arisen from weakness of administration and extent of territory." Although acquitting Mr. Rhodes of sordid motives, and descanting on his liberality to the settlers and the natives, the author practically accuses him of having forced on the war with Lobengula under the pretence of protecting the Mashonas. He remarks on the great personality of the South African statesman, which, he states, exercised an influence over both the Dutch in the Colony and the Republics. He quotes a conversation between Mr. Merriman and himself, in the course of which he remarked, that Mr. Rhodes ought to have been detained in England and tried at the same time as Dr. Jameson; in reply, it appears, Mr. Merriman flared up at once, "I don't agree with you at all," he said, "I am a strong enough opponent of Mr. Rhodes, but if we choose to elect the Devil himself, we are not going to have you (the English Government) say we shall not."

It is stated that "the actuality of Rhodesia has been made vague and distorted as much by the exaggeration of glamorous hopes as by the bitterness of ignorant detraction."

The pamphlet discusses Mr. Rhodes' proposals for the gradual development of the country from a "Chartered Administration to a self-governing State"; the Chartered Government Methods; the intermediate stage; Self-Government; and the Appendix deals with the "Summary of the B. S. A. Co.'s Report of March 1897." A Note at the end of the pamphlet states that "Rhodesian Problems, No. II., will contain a statistical exposure of the 50 per cent. Mining Fallacy, an analysis of the Proposed Public Debt, and other matters relating to Rhodesian Finance, and the costs borne by the population."

London : Allahabad : Printed at the Pioneer Press. 74 pp. 12mo. 1904.

At the end of the year 1901 the Colonial Secretary obtained the loan of the services of the author and of Colonel J. S. Wilkins from the Indian Government to take charge of the "Transvaal Burgher Camps." Mr. Thomson discusses the charge of "want of personal cleanliness among the Boers," and observes that it must be remembered "that ablutions are apt to be less frequent and popular when water has to be laboriously brought from considerable distances, as is so often the case with farms on the veld. When bath-rooms were provided in the camps they were freely and regularly used." Reference is made to the dense ignorance prevailing amongst the "back country Boers," and it is stated that some of these believed that "the children were being branded with the Government mark" when they were vaccinated. Patience and perseverance, however, dispelled much of this ignorance and suspicion, and "after a certain time, the good intentions and skill of the doctors were recognised by nearly all, and . . . the hospitals were most popular institutions, and concealment of disease was comparatively rare."

mately succeeded in accomplishing. The author subsequently proceeded to Swaziland, and he gives an interesting account of the country, together with notes on King Umbandine, who gave him a concession to build a store and hotel. The third edition. London: Printed for F. & C. Rivington . . . and sold by W. Richardson . . . and T. Egerton. . . . Cr. 8vo. 1795-6.

Thunberg was educated at Upsal, and having obtained the "Kohrean Pension for Travelling," made a tour through various European countries in order to extend his knowledge of botany. During his travels he became acquainted with the celebrated botanist, Professor Burmann, and through his influence was enabled to proceed to the Cape as a surgeon in the service of the Dutch East India Company. He remained for about three years in South Africa, and made several trips into the interior, in which he was accompanied by Messrs. Masson, Oldenburg, and others. His narrative affords considerable information respecting the natural history of the country, together with notes on the Hottentots, Kaffirs, and slaves, and general remarks on the state of the Cape at this period. He passes some strictures on the rapacity of the officials and the corruption that prevailed, observing, "While the Governor makes ten rix dollars on every pipe of wine that is sold, other officers find their advantage in giving leave of absence to people who receive pay from the Company without doing any service for it. Some make their fortunes by false weights, others by damaged goods. A shipwreck fills the pocket of many. In consequence of the rapacity of the captains and their mates, the sailors seldom get their due.") The greater part of the first volume, and about half of the second, are devoted to an account of Thunberg's experiences in South Africa, his botanical notes being of special value. Later on he visited Japan, Ceylon, and other places, and "on his return to Sweden he succeeded the celebrated Linnæus, whose pupil he had originally been, in the Professorship of Botany at Upsal" (Maunder's Biographical Treasury). He died in 1828.

The author remarks that although "much valuable and interesting information respecting" the Hottentots, "their character, manners, and customs, has already been collected in the books of travellers and other works . . . until very recently their language has been a very much neglected subject of inquiry." It is stated that the four different dialects of the Hottentot language are "The Hottentot Proper," "The Coranna," "The Namaqua," and "The Bushman," and it is observed that the latter is "subdivided into numerous brogues, some intelligible and others unintelligible to the other varieties of the Hottentot family," but that these "sufficiently resemble it in grammatical structure to show that they belong to it."

This compilation, according to Theal ("History of South Africa, 1691-1795"), "is one of a collection of works upon contemporary history published by Isaak Tirion of Amsterdam." One hundred and eighteen pages are devoted to the Cape Colony, but "the historical references are less correct than one could wish to see them, and in all parts inaccuracies may be found," which follow the errors of the authors from which the information was drawn. Mr. Theal states that the general map of South Africa "is very erroneous."

The causes of the Transvaal War and the South African Question. Abstract from an article in the Alpina Oberstrasz.

The author remarks, "The Germans annex, the Russians annex, the French, Italians, and the North Americans (U.S.A.) all annex, even the Boers themselves do the same—what is the reason then of all this turmoil because England proposes to annex what has by rights belonged to her long ago ? ” In summing up, it is contended that—

1. The Transvaal War is absolutely a struggle between two races for the mastery of South Africa.
2. The Boers, or at all events their most important leaders, designed and foresaw the war long before, and must therefore abide by the consequences.
3. The annexation of the Transvaal is a matter of life and death to the English possessions in South Africa and the British Colonies at a great distance from the home country.
4. The loss of the independence of the Transvaal is a political event, which is a matter of indifference to the human race; on the other hand the maintenance of England's Colonial Empire in Africa is of immeasurable utility and importance not only to England but to all mankind.

Nearly the whole of the volume is devoted to “sketches of the deeds of the Irregular Cavalry of the Flying Column” in the Zulu War, and “notes of a march across North Basutoland and the Transvaal.” Only the last chapter refers to the “Boer Outbreak” (1880–1881), and it merely records the writer's opinions respecting the state of affairs in the Transvaal at this period.

Voyage to the East Indies during the years 1802, 1803, 1804, 1805, 1806, containing a description of the Cape of Good Hope, the isles of France, Bonaparte, Java, Banca, and the town of Batavia. . . . With an atlas of marine and military charts drawn by the author, with plates representing the costume and armour of the inhabitants of the country, and other illustrations. . . . By C. F. Tombe, formerly Captain of the Engineers at the Regency at Batavia. . . . Revised and augmented, with many explanatory notes, by M. Sonnini.

The account of the Cape consists of about thirty pages, the author arriving there on the 25th of December 1802. An English fleet of ten ships and a Dutch fleet of seven ships were in Table Bay awaiting the 1st of January, when the colony was to be handed back to the Dutch. On December 31st a British corvette arrived with the news that the retrocession of the colony was to be suspended, a piece of intelligence received with considerable apprehension by the inhabitants, who feared that war was going to break out again; and they were kept in suspense for over six weeks before the final instructions were sent to hand over the colony to the Batavian authorities. Tombe mentions that there were no hotels in Cape Town, but that all the inhabitants took in strangers who required accommodation, and he remarks that the people of the country were very hospitable, and that every family had from four to twelve slaves. The captain of the ship on which Mr. Tombe had embarked was evidently somewhat nervous as to the political situation, and took his departure with little delay on January 2, 1803.

It is stated that "In a gold-mining district like Johannesburg, the metal contained in the by-products is naturally gold with a small percentage of silver. Twelve or fourteen years ago, . . . the working conditions of these gold-fields were such as to render the working of by-products out of the question. At that time their production was not very considerable, and consisted principally of battery chips and slugs from the smelting of the gold bars . . . other by-products at the time were the tailings produced by the batteries after the amalgamation of the pulp. . . . Later on, these tailings . . . became products in themselves, giving up most of the gold they contained to the gentle persuasion of cyanide of potassium. Although the action of this chemical on gold, silver, and other metals was already well known, its successful industrial application to the treatment of tailings . . . is undoubtedly the greatest metallurgical triumph of the last century relating to gold. It converted many gold-mining companies which were on the verge of bankruptcy into most flourishing dividend paying concerns, gave quite a different aspect to many doubtful mining propositions, . . . &c. &c.

This communication is addressed from the Albemarle Hotel, London, and is dated July 10, 1878. It refers to the failure of the previous deputation and the decision of the citizens of the Republic to "appeal to the Justice of England," through the newly-appointed delegates, Messrs. S. J. P. Kruger and P. J. Joubert, and enters into a detailed statement respecting the case for the reversal of the Annexation. After an enumeration of the four enclosed documents in support of their "constituents," the signatories discuss the commission of Sir Theophilus Shepstone, under which the act of annexation was carried out, criticising the reasons alleged in justification of the step, and throwing the responsibility regarding the state of affairs with respect to the natives on the Imperial Government. The pamphlet also contains minutes of the "Pretoria and Potchefstroom Committees . . . April 4, 1878, and following days"; Extract from the "Minutes of the Volksraad, February 22, 1877"; Copy of "Resolution of the Executive Council, April 1877, No. 7"; "Translation of Protest," signed by Thos. Burgers, President of the South African Republic; "Memorial" to Lord Carnarvon, &c. &c. &c.

London: Harrison and Sons. . . . 58 pp. 8vo. 1881.

This pamphlet includes the preliminary letter from Messrs. Kruger and Joubert, dated July 10, 1878, and a reply from the Secretary of State for the Colonies, in which he states that "the reasons which have forbid a reversal of the steps . . . taken are tenfold greater than those that dictated the act." Further communications sent by the Deputation on August 7th and 23rd were answered by a final letter from Sir Michael, on September 16th, in which he stated that "it is the object of Her Majesty's Government that the Transvaal should remain an integral and separate community . . . under the Sovereignty of the Queen." The pamphlet contains several Appendices, including Proclamations and Protests, &c. &c.

- *(TRANSVAAL): (ANNEXATION, 1881—ENGRAVINGS): Annexation of the Transvaal. Twelve Engravings with text, published with the design of affording succour to the surviving relatives of Boers slain in war. (No printer's or publisher's name or address.) 12 Plates. Oblong Folio. (13½" × 8½"). (1881)?

A curious but bitter series of plates connected with the first annexation of the Transvaal. The letterpress is in three languages, Dutch, French, and German, and is, at times, as are some of the sketches, of the most grotesque and ludicrous nature. The first of the illustrations is entitled "The Deadly Grasp," and depicts a lion (England) seizing the prostrate figure of a woman (Transvalia), and below is the sentence, "Hullo, my lads! Three cheers for old England." At the end of the series is an inscription on the wrapper entitled "Naschrift 1877-1881," with the following distich in four languages, "Old England sacrificed her honour to her glory, With guiltless blood she stained her scutcheon."

The Uitlander Refugee Committee invited Dr. M. J. Farelly to place on record his opinion with regard to projected legislation in the new Transvaal Colony. Dr. Farelly sums up his views in a memorandum, in which he advises the encouragement of State-assisted immigration, together with Government irrigation and assistance to agriculturists. He deprecates any policy which might have the effect of limiting the white population, or discouraging the exploitation of new mineral fields. He asserts that what he describes as "the present monopoly of the mines" is opposed to Imperial interests, and that groups holding the present control will only support such taxation as may be useful for their own purposes. He quotes the example of the De Beers Company at Kimberley as a case in point with regard to the effects of a monopoly, and recommends a suspension of rent, mortgages, and contracts in the Transvaal pending the resumption of business.

An important speech was made by the President, Mr. G. Rouliot, at the meeting of the Chamber on April 3, 1902, which is given in full. This little pamphlet charges the Boer Government with planning the Matabele Rebellion and supplying the natives with arms and ammunition. It alleges that Colonel Ferreira, C.M.G., acted as agent of the Transvaal in this matter, and that arms bearing the mark Z. A. R. (South African Republic) were captured from the Matabele, the Boers accounting for the possession of these guns by the natives by stating that they had been stolen, while in reality the burglary was a mere sham, the arms having been removed by Ferreira from the Government Magazines at Middleburg and Pretoria.

“The purpose of the publication (which is also designated “The Transvaal and its Mines”) is to create a standing Work of Reference on the most important of the two South African Colonies last added to the Empire.” The dimensions of the volume—partly as it is—would not allow of detail treatment to the variety and number of the subjects included, “but as far as practicable . . . a comprehensive description of the institutions and industries of the Transvaal is presented.” The volume is well printed, on good paper, and is lavishly illustrated, many of the portraits and views being productions of scarce prints, while the information afforded is of the most comprehensive character.

Nathan, together with Extracts from the Official Report of the British Resident in Pretoria to the Colonial Office, November 1887. The Union Steam Ship Company, Ltd., Southampton . . . London. 28 pp. 8vo. (1888.)

An account of the De Kaap and Witwatersrand Gold Fields soon after their discovery. It is curious to read, in the Official Report of the British Resident to the Colonial Office, the following sage prediction: “I do not imagine that even in the event of the Gold Fields (the Witwatersrand) attaining the great degree of success anticipated, a very great amount of white labour will be needed.”

The law, as laid down in the above Acts, provides for precious stones as well as precious metals, but (mainly in consequence of the discovery of the “Premier” diamond mine near Pretoria) a separate Diamond Law was promulgated after the second annexation of the Transvaal (1900), by which the State acquires three-fifths of any "dry," or permanent diamond mine, which is discovered in the Transvaal Colony.

The articles of the "New Grondwet" were revised and discussed by the Transvaal Volksraad, and came into use and operation on the 2nd day of February 1858, being signed by M. W. Pretorius as President and S. T. Schoeman as Commandant-General at the Landrost's Office, Rustenburg, on February 13, 1858. Addendas I. and II., published on the 19th of September 1859, deal with the recognised authorities respecting Roman Dutch Law, Van Der Linden, Simon Van Leeuwen, and Hugo de Groot (Grotius). In No. 3 of Addenda No. I. reference is made to the thirty-three articles, "being general stipulations and laws for Law Court Sessions"; these were drawn up at Potchefstroom on the 9th day of April 1844, and ratified at Derdepoort on the 23rd of May 1849.

General information is provided respecting Johannesburg, the Witwatersrand district generally, and the country districts, and it is stated that at the census of 1904 the total population was 1,268,716, of whom 299,327 were whites. Particulars are given of facilities offered to intending settlers with small capitals, and it is reported that the number of those already established under the Land Settlement Scheme was 557, who had received allotments to the extent of 690,929 acres, the loans to the settlers amounting to £94,524. The Mining Industry of the Transvaal and the Reform Question.

The writer discusses the French interests in the Transvaal, the dynamite monopoly, the coal industry, the cost of transport, and the labour question, and observes that "the suggested reforms are reasonable, just, and easy to effect, and that they are necessary to the existence of a fine industry and the peace and prosperity of a nation still in its youth, and destined to a great future. The question is whether, by the effect of intrigue, illusion, and coalesced ignorance, the splendid promise of the country will be averted, or combating abuse, corruption, and sycophancy, the government of Mr. Kruger will secure to the State the benefits it should possess."

Compiled and published by the Witwatersrand Chamber of Mines, Johannesburg, S.A.R. Johannesburg: Times Printing & Publishing Works. xii + 747 pp. Quarto. 1897.

This important and statistical work affords a complete account of the evidence brought before the Commission appointed by the Executive Council of the Volksraad, in April 1897, to inquire into the "alleged state of affairs in connection with the mining industry of the Witwatersrand." The full members of the Commission were Messrs. S. W. Burger, J. S. Smit, G. Schmitz-Dumont, and J. F. De Beer; while Messrs. Thomas Hugo, E. Brochon, J. Pierce, A. Brakkan, and (at a later period) James Hay, and George Albu were appointed advisory members. The sittings lasted from April 20th to June 4, 1897, and the Commissioners condemned certain monopolies and concessions, recommended "the lightening of the duties on foodstuffs, and of the railway rates on coal and other articles," and advocated "more effective administration and enforcement of the pass law, the liquor law, and the gold theft clauses of the gold law." In the Appendix will be found articles on the "Netherlands Railway Concession," "The State Dynamite Monopoly," a "List of the Electors of the South African Republic," "The Pass Law," "The Liquor Law," "The Gold Law," a "Schedule of Native Wages, Witwatersrand," &c. &c.

The evidence of the witnesses examined by the Commission clearly proved that the faulty administration of the Pass Law for the natives had resulted in a shortage of labour, and an enormous loss to companies who had paid large sums for recruiting labourers who had subsequently deserted. Most of the witnesses were opposed to the compound system, as employed in the diamond mines, but some of them favoured a kind of compulsory labour law, on the lines of the Glen Grey Act in the Cape Colony. The Commission decided to enter into correspondence with all South African States "in order once and for all to place the question of black labour on a sound basis," but it was stated that the members could not "recommend any measure which would be equivalent to forced labour," or "the imposition of a higher tax on Kaffirs." It was suggested that the carrying out of the Pass Law should be entrusted to the "control of a Local Board on the Gold Fields," and that a Board or Commission should be established in Johannesburg "to be composed of members appointed by the Government representative of the mining industry and commercial firms of the Witwatersrand . . . the object of this commission would be the supervision of the administration of the following laws : Liquor Law . . . ; the Pass Law, and law regarding gold thefts ; and further, they would have an advisory vote as regards the supply of natives to the mines. . . ."

At a meeting convened by the Aborigines Protection Society, on March 31, 1881, Lord Shaftesbury, who was in the Chair, remarked "that he felt very strongly as to the cruel conduct of the Boers towards the natives." Sir Fowell Buxton moved a resolution stating "that this meeting expresses its satisfaction at the arrangement Sir Evelyn Wood has concluded with the Boers, by which her Majesty's Government are empowered to delimit the eastern frontier, and to appoint a British Resident to protect native interests in the districts reserved for the Boers."

Programme of the Public Festival at Paardekraal, South African Republic.

A programme of the festivities entered into on the inauguration of the Paardekraal Monument by President Kruger on December 16, 1891. There are portraits of the Triumvirate (Kruger, Pretorius, and Joubert), and a view of the monument. The proceedings opened with a wapenschouwing (review) on the 15th December, which was followed in the evening by target shooting by electric light, and fireworks. A salute of twenty-one guns opened the solemnities on December 16th, when the Burghers were ordered to assemble for prayer at 7 o'clock in the morning, services being held throughout the day by the most famous preachers in the country, while speeches were made by well-known politicians and officials. The publication contains the Volkslied, lists of the names of the committee, the generals and officers in the 1880-1881 war, and the Burghers who met with their death in the campaign, and the Proclamation of Independence issued and signed by the Triumvirate, December 16, 1880.

The writer is occasionally sweeping in his charges, describing Sir Richard Solomon and Messrs. Merriman, Schreiner, Sauer, and Te Water as politicians from whom "no sympathy for the Queen's loyal subjects can be expected." He draws attention to the antipathy to the Bond once expressed by Messrs. Merriman and Cronwright-Schreiner, and contrasts it with their attachment to the "South African Party" in 1900.

A series of letters written from the Transvaal between December 1876 and April 1877, during a period when confederation or annexation of the Republic was being discussed. The writer contends that the independence guaranteed by the British Government (by the Sand River Convention) could have been either absolute or qualified, and that in effect the Republics were only guaranteed autonomy on certain conditions which had not been carried out. In the second letter attention is drawn to the insecurity of property in the Transvaal, and many instances are afforded of the weakness exhibited by the Government of the Republic when brought into contact with turbulent native tribes. Details are furnished regarding the support in favour of the policy of Federation given by the inhabitants of many of the districts, and The Volkstem is quoted as admitting that as the Burghers refused to pay taxes, the country must fall into the hands of the British by annexation or confederation.

They accept everything as their right, without surprise or gratification," but he thought that something different might have been expected from fellow-countrymen even though they had been opposed to the war. Reference is made to the energy of the Governor of the two new colonies, and it is stated that in less than a month he succeeded in getting more ground ploughed than ever was ploughed in the country before, in one season.

The deputation was introduced by Sir D. Wedderburn. The memorial, which was read by Dr. Clark, stated, inter alia, that the Committee feared "that the establishment of the suzerainty of the Crown, the appropriation of territory from the Boers, and the control of their foreign relations by England, are conditions of peace which may lead to serious difficulties in the future." Dr. Clark observed that the committee was of opinion that the Government "should again recognise the Transvaal as a free and independent State." Lord Kimberley, in reply, stated that the object of the Government was to maintain "everlasting peace in South Africa."

and is the enunciation of the platform adopted by the "Transvaal National Union." It is stated that the Constitution of the Union is very simple, its objects being :—

- A. The preservation of the Independence of the Republic.
- B. To obtain by all possible constitutional means equal rights for all white residents of this Republic, and the remedy of all grievances.

A bitter and somewhat ridiculous attack on the Boers, couched in extravagant language and making absurd charges. The writer defends the policy of England, charges the Boers with participation in the slave trade, and generally replies to certain letters published by a Mr. Guilbert in the Chronicle (? San Francisco). The second edition contains a chapter on "Griqua Land East and West," &c. &c. &c.

The pamphlet professes to be "a Retrospect and a Forecast," and discusses the early European settlements, the rise of the Dutch power, the establishment of the English supremacy, the Dutch hatred of English rule, the first Dutch emigration from Cape Colony, the foundation of the Dutch Republics, the annexations of the Republics by the British, &c. &c.

The poems were written "for the most part during the Russian War," and were reprinted by the sons of the late Archbishop during the South African War, 1899–1902. The Introduction states that "a contest has come upon us, inevitable, and undesired; a contest waged with no hate, no bitterness against a brave and resolute foe; but nevertheless a contest on whose successful issue depend the highest hopes of a mighty continent. In this hour . . . every Englishman would fain do what he may for England. . . ."

- *TREVES, Sir FREDERICK: The Tale of a Field Hospital. By Frederick Treves. . . . Fourth thousand, with 14 illustrations from original photographs. Cassell & Co., Limited, London, Paris, New York, and Melbourne. vii+109 pp. Sm. Quarto. 1900.

The author, one of the most eminent British surgeons of the day, went to Natal during the dark days of Buller's campaign in the South African War, 1899-1902, and his account of the sufferings of the wounded is extremely sad. The scope of the volume is confined strictly to a review of work in connection with the hospitals and ambulances, and there is no criticism of political or military matters. The Field Hospital described was known as "No. 4 Stationary Hospital," its name being something of a misnomer, as it moved with the column until the relief of Ladysmith. The first station it occupied was "Frere," where there were about 30,000 troops, and here Sir Frederick had an opportunity of seeing the effects of Boer looting. There is a graphic account of the scenes among the wounded after the battle of Colenso, and many touching examples are given of the heroism, unselfishness, and cheerfulness of the wounded British soldiers. Mention is made of the valuable assistance rendered by the "Volunteer Ambulance Corps," which was organised by Colonel Gallwey: this company comprised 2000 men, and the author praises their conduct and services. He seems to have mastered the characteristics of the British privates very rapidly, and he by no means agrees with the title "absent-minded," as applied to them by Kipling. Sir Frederick accompanied General Buller on his entry into Ladysmith after the relief, and draws a touching picture of the wretched state of the inhabitants and the town.

"It is satisfactory," remarks Sir Frederick Treves, "to find that the graver of the charges made have proved to be either exaggerated or unfounded, and that the medical service of the army can claim to rise from the ordeal with distinct credit." With reference to the suggestions made with a view to remedying defects in the system, it is admitted that the Medical Corps "is not only capable of improvement, but in great need of it," and it is recommended that the "Director General of the Army Medical Department should have a recognised position" in the councils of the army. The following reasons are given to account for the scarcity of good medical officers :—

1. Inadequate pay.
2. The limited time afforded for holiday leave and purposes of study, &c.
3. Lack of encouragement for advancement in professional work.
4. The non-professional work thrown upon army doctors.

The formation of an "Army Medical Reserve" is suggested, and it is asserted that the present examinations do not deal with many requisite subjects.

*TRIMEN, ROLAND : Rhopalocera Africae Australis ; a catalogue of South African butterflies ; comprising descriptions of all the known species, with notices of their larvæ, pupæ, localities, habits, seasons of appearance, and geographical distribution. By Roland Trimen. . . . With illustrations by G. H. Ford. London : Trübner & Co. . . . Cape Town : W. F. Mathew. . . . iv + 353 pp. 8vo. 1862–1866.

The original intention of the author "was simply to have given a list of all the known South African butterflies, with notes on their habits, localities, &c., only describing the new or previously undescribed species" ; on further consideration, however, he resolved "to make original descriptions of all the species." Mr. Trimen devoted a year to the collection and observation of the Lepidoptera of the Cape Colony, residing there for that period, and on his return to England continued his studies at the Entomological Department of the British Museum. In this volume "the first five of the families of South African butterflies are included, comprising rather more than half the number of known species, and there are six coloured plates.

London: Trübner & Co. Roy. 8vo. 3 Vols. 1887-1889.

The author states, "The book entitled 'Rhopalocera Africæ Australis; A Catalogue of South African Butterflies' . . . has for long been out of print as well as out of date. . . . As the new work is much more than a second edition of the former one, I have given it a different title, concisely descriptive of its character and scope." Mr. Trimen remarks, "Although for many years fortunately situated as regards the prosecution of this work by my tenure of the Curatorship of the South African Museum, I have on the other hand had to sustain the serious disadvantage of being tied by official duties to a locality lamentably barren of butterfly life. Cape Town and its neighbourhood is absolutely not more productive of species than Brighton. . . ." He acknowledges the great assistance he had received from Colonel Bowker and a large number of students and collectors throughout South Africa, the United Kingdom, and the continent of Europe who had enabled him to bring the work to a successful issue.

two volumes. London: Chapman & Hall. . . . Vol. I. vii + 352 pp.; Vol. II. vii + 352 pp. Cr. 8vo. 1878.

An account of a short tour throughout South Africa in 1877, together with a synopsis of the history of the sub-continent under Dutch and British rule, and the author's opinions respecting the native question and the proposal to federate the states and colonies. Mr. Trollope visited the Cape Colony, Natal, the Transvaal, the Orange Free State, and Griqualand West, and he gives considerable information respecting the Boer and British colonists, much of which, however, has been compiled from the works of other writers. The account of the Transvaal is of special interest, as the visit was made soon after the first annexation, and some pains appear to have been taken to elicit the views of the people upon the subject. Mr. Trollope remarks, "The only man I have met in all South Africa who has questioned the propriety of what has been done is Mr. Burgers, the ousted President. Though I have discussed the matter wherever I have been . . . I have never encountered even a doubtful word on the subject except in what Mr. Burgers said to me. And Mr. Burgers acknowledged to me, not once or twice only, that the step which had been taken was manifestly beneficial to the natives, to the English, and to the Dutch. He thought that Sir Theophilus had done a great wrong, but that the wrong done would be of great advantage to every one concerned. . . . I have to acknowledge with all my sympathies strongly opposed to what I call high-handed political operations, that I think Sir Theophilus (Shepstone) was justified."

In referring to the "painful lack of the simple graces of the household in . . . beautiful Cape Colony," the author observes that "the Cape possesses old colonial buildings which still testify to the artistic feeling of the Dutchmen two centuries back." The volume contains thirty-four full-page engravings of the best examples of old Dutch houses "within a radius of fifty miles from Cape Town," together with descriptive notes accompanied by illustrations in the text. Amongst the most famous of these structures are "Groot Constantia," "Vergelegen," the hall of the Castle at Cape Town, the "Oude Pastorie, Paarl," "La Dauphine, French Hoek," and "Bosch-en-Dal." - *TUDHOPE, JOHN : The Voortrekkers of South Africa, being two lectures delivered before the Literary and Debating Society of Pretoria, on August 17th and September 14th, 1891, by the Hon. John Tudhope (late Colonial Secretary of the Cape Colony). Published by request. Natal: Printed by P. Davis & Sons, Durban, and Pietermaritzburg. 54 pp. 8vo. 1891.

It is stated that these addresses "were originally prepared with the double object of removing some of the ignorance . . . prevailing even in well-informed circles in Johannesburg respecting the stirring events which preceded and led up to the founding of the two Dutch Republics," and of adding a contribution "to the great cause of Political Union in South Africa." Referring to the incident of Slachter's Nek, Mr. Tudhope observes, "Any one who has moved much amongst the country population, as I have done from boyhood," could realise that "though no trace of resentment and hate arising out of these events has found its way into public and official communications, it was there, deep-rooted and abiding, and that it tinted the medium through which . . . all the subsequent acts of the English Government were regarded."

- *TUDHOPE, JOHN : The Settlement in South Africa. Ex. "The Empire Review," vol. i., No. 1, pp. 28-40. Roy. 8vo. February, 1901.

The writer was long a resident in South Africa, and had represented the town of Uitenhage in the Parliament of the Cape Colony, and been "a member of a so-called Bond ministry." In his opinion, "The annexation to the British Empire of the two Republics must be accepted as an accomplished fact, unalterable and inalienable." In referring to the assertions of pro-Boer writers that "no evidence exists of a conspiracy to oust the British power from South Africa," it is maintained that this is merely "begging the question"; no organised plot existed, "but there is abundant evidence that the dream of a nebulous republic on an Afrikaner basis," as Mr. Rhodes maintained, "had taken hold of the minds of the Dutch-speaking people of South Africa . . . and they looked to Paul Kruger as ordained by the Almighty to deliver His chosen people from their thralldom. . . ." It is remarked that when Lord Roberts entered Pretoria, Mr. Kretschmar, general manager of the Netherlands S. A. Railways, wrote to his board of directors that "The dream of a Greater Holland is at an end." Mr. Tudhope discusses some of the propositions brought forward for the settlement, amongst which are those of "Anglo-Afrikaner," Sir Henry Drummond Wolff, Mr. J. B. Robinson, and Mr. Chamberlain; he also propounds his own suggestions and ideas on the subject, which provide, inter alia, for a kind of modified Crown Colony Government for the new colonies.

With inscription on the title-page, "Sir R. Herbert, with the author's Compts."

The pamphlet contains a short historical sketch of Natal, with notes on its industries, minerals, and natives, with some account of the Zulus, and the British and Boer colonists. The writer repels the insinuation which has so often been made, that the inhabitants of the colony "are anxious to get up wars in order to bring money into the country," and remarks that "the Natal colonists who have benefited in this respect may be counted on one's fingers. . . . Speaking generally, army contractors and canteen keepers are the only individuals who make money out of war in Natal, or the presence of troops in outlying stations there."

About sixteen pages are devoted to an account of the author's residence in South Africa, where he arrived late in the year 1884. During his stay in Natal he visited John Dunn's country, and was greatly interested in the natives, remarking, "I saw something of the life of the raw Zulus, nature's gentlemen and ladies, very different from the Kaffir and the degenerated Zulu brought up in a town . . . the Zulu is the finest specimen of the black man to be found anywhere. Settlers who have employed him for years, soldiers who have fought against him, all are equally enthusiastic as to his good qualities. Every one who has had anything to do with the raw (Kraal) Zulus declares them to be brave, truthful, and moral to a degree unknown amongst civilised nations."

The Bishop's letter contains some account of the mission stations at Bloemfontein, Smithfield, and Fauresmith, and other places in the diocese and in the Transvaal. It is stated that "at Bloemfontein the services have been held, by the permission of the Authorities, in the Government schoolroom—an old thatched building sadly out of repair, capable of seating nearly a hundred persons. It is a poor place, and almost unbearably hot in summer, but we are thankful to have it."

It is remarked in the Introduction that during the year (1865) "the State has been engaged with more or less activity in war with the Basutos under old Moshesh." Hostilities have never been carried on with much spirit on either side, and have often consisted only of a succession of raids. . . . Both parties seem now to have inflicted as much injury on one another as they are able. . . . The Rev. C. Clulee attended the headquarters of the Free State Army as Chaplain to the English on 'Commando' . . . and held services for the Dutch as well as the English." There is an account of the Bishop's journey to Griqualand East, together with many interesting details concerning Adam Kok and the Griquas, and extracts from the Bishop's journal.

D., Colonel Farquhar Glennie, late Commanding 1/24th Regt., Colonel William Penn Symons, Commanding 2/24th Regt., Lieut.-Colonel H. B. Moffat, Hon. Sec. London : Simpkin, Marshall, Hamilton, Kent & Co. Devonport : A. H. Swiss. x+370 pp. 8vo. 1892.

Few regiments in the British army have had so long and eventful a connection with South Africa as the 24th, whose first appearance in the sub-continent was in 1806, when the first battalion took part in the expedition to the Cape under Lieut.-Gen. Sir David Baird. The regiment was subsequently stationed at the Cape till 1810, when it was despatched to India. Its next appearance in South Africa was in the year 1875, when the first battalion landed at Cape Town on January 2nd, and on the 6th of May two detachments were sent to Griqualand West to cope with a threatened insurrection on the part of the diamond diggers. On August 3, 1877, the battalion was sent to King William's Town, and during that year, and in 1878, was engaged in the Kaffir War against the Gaikas and Galekas under the chiefs Ndlambe, Kreli, and Sandilli, and the campaign was scarcely over when the troops were despatched to Natal. The second battalion had also been engaged in the Kaffir War, and the combined battalions took part in the Zulu campaign, and there is a good account of the battles of Isandhlwana and Rorke's Drift, and other engagements, the total losses of the regiment amounting to 22 officers and 655 non-commissioned officers and men. "On July 1, 1881 . . . the time-honoured title of the 24th (or 2nd Warwickshire) Regiment was ordered to be discontinued, and the 1st and 2nd battalions . . . to be styled the First and Second Battalions of the South Wales Borderers."

An interesting account of the Zulus and their country from 1849-1888. Mr. Tyler was fully of opinion that Sir Bartle Frere's policy was justified, and that the Zulu Problem was a question which had to be settled without delay in view of the military situation in Cetywayo's country. He observes "that Natal was in peril, no clear-headed man can deny. The colonists were near the crater of a volcano liable at any time to eruption. Cetywayo could not control his warriors." There is a valuable chapter on Zulu folklore, and the volume is illustrated by a large number of original drawings.

The Bushmen exhibited by Mr. Tyler appear to have been a different party to those brought over by Mr. G. R. Bishop (see BOSJESMANS, 1847). In addition to the lecture, there are several anecdotes respecting the adventures of the Bushmen in the United Kingdom, taken from the "Scrap-book of Mr. S. Tyler, Guardian of the Bosjesmans."

A series of letters addressed to Major Sir Bartle Frere, from June 26, 1899, to November 4, 1902. The writer states that he was a refugee in Cape Town till March 1902, when he returned to Johannesburg, and he asserts that "he is not connected with gold-mining and is an honest Englishman." He remarks that some of his communications from the Rand were written in Greek characters owing to the reported examination of letters by the Transvaal Government. He discusses the attitude of the Afrikaners in the Cape Colony, who, it is maintained, "have for years worked to produce disaffection among the Boers," and it is observed that the Dutch round the Paarl had Mauser rifles bearing the Transvaal Government mark. He advocates the suspension of the Constitution of the Cape Colony, and the division of the territory into the Eastern and Western Districts, and it is argued that "by a separate West, you create one additional loyal State in South Africa." It is stated that the plans and intentions of Dr. Jameson were perfectly understood at Pretoria, and that thus the Pretoria Government was an accessory before the fact to the Raid.

By Frederic William Unger, late Correspondent in South Africa for the "Daily Express," London. Henry T. Coates & Company, Philadelphia. Pp. 10, 412. 8vo. 1901.

The narrative of an American war correspondent during a portion of the South African War. Mr. Unger was possessed of considerable resource and assurance, and was evidently not troubled by unnecessary scruples with regard to the methods he used to obtain his requirements. After considerable trouble, and several rebuffs, he contrived to get a licence as a newspaper correspondent, and although not at first attached to any special journal, he eventually succeeded in being appointed to the Philadelphia Press, Grocott's Mail (Graham's Town), and the Daily Express (London). He accompanied Lord Roberts' army for several months, after which he decided to see something of the war from the other side, and proceeding to Pretoria, obtained a passport, and was allowed by Reitz to act as war correspondent with the Boer forces. He gives an interesting account of the life at Machadorp while the village was the headquarters of the Boer army, and the capital of the Republic, with sketches of President Kruger and many of the Boer leaders. The volume contains many curious and original photographs, one of which, i.e., "The Battle of Spion-kop," is stated to have had "the unique distinction of having been subjected to an attempted suppression by two Governments. Representing the British dead on the field at Spionkop three days unburied, with pockets turned inside out and shoes taken off, the Boers did not relish this evidence of their love of loot; on the other hand, being an evidence of the terrible slaughter inflicted on the English, Lord Roberts ordered the confiscation and destruction of all plates and prints at Bloemfontein. Both Boer and British attempts at suppression failed. . . ."

Lord Valentia arrived at the Cape on October 20, 1802, and remained there until November 5th, and he affords an account of his visit to the country in the vicinity of Cape Town, and a description of the Paarl and of French Hoek. He observes, "Impressed as I strongly am with a conviction of its importance as a settlement to Great Britain, it was with great regret that I had seen, during my short stay at the Cape, the preparation to deliver it back to the Dutch. . . . The conduct of the British since it has been in their possession has been such as to conciliate all the respectable people of the settlement, who did not scruple to express great regret at their departure. . . . The Dutch have still more powerful reason for regretting the departure of the English, the state in which they now actually are, and are likely to be, from the Caffres." A little further on Lord Valentia remarks, "While this little book is going to the press, in 1808, I have the satisfaction of knowing that the Cape of Good Hope is again, and I hope will be for ever, in the possession of Great Britain."

Fifth Volume. Part II. A description of the Netherlands establishment on the coast of Malabar, and of our trade in Japan, together with an account of the Cape of Good Hope and the Island of Mauritius, and matters connected with the before-mentioned states and countries. Embellished with many prints and maps. By Francis Valentyn, lately Minister of the Gospel in Amboyna, Banda, &c.

This part of Valentyn's monumental work includes 149 pages devoted to an account of the Cape, and possesses several maps, charts, and illustrations of the natives, fauna, &c. Theal says ("History of South Africa, 1486-1691") that "the author, who was a clergyman, called at the Cape in the years 1685, 1695, 1705, and 1714. He was supplied by the Government with a great amount of information, including copies and charts, and several documents. Using this as a basis, he added to it from personal observation, and from communications, oral and written, from many of the principal residents in the Colony. The whole is worked up into an admirable description of the country."

South Africa before and after Dr. Jameson's Raid into the Transvaal.

A criticism on the government of the Transvaal. The author remarks that a "country, in this century, which does not know how to administer itself, when the capital represented there is ever increasing, is certain to find itself in a highly perilous condition, whatever sympathy people may have with it."

The writer comments on the success of the German Colony near Cape Town, and considers its prosperity a proof that "white immigration would be a success in South Africa." During a four years' visit to the country, he steadily advocated the importation of Italian labour, but was opposed by the descendants of his countrymen, the Dutch, who, it is stated, are "with few exceptions too much attached to the old routine," and who "handicapped every innovation in the Cape Parliament. They prefer labourers who remain what they are all their lives and don't want to improve their condition."

By Colonel F. I. Maxse, C.B., D.S.O., Coldstream Guards; with Water-colour Drawings by Nico Jungmann. London: The National Review. 288 pp. Roy. 8vo. 1905.

Colonel Vandeleur was born in London on July 11, 1869, and like most of his ancestors, entered the army immediately after his education was completed. He "stuck closely to regimental duty in Dublin, London, Pirbright, and Windsor" for five years, and after further training left England for the Dark Continent at the end of 1893. He saw service in Uganda, British Nigeria, Egypt, and the Soudan, taking part in the Atbara Campaign, and being present at the battle of Omdurman. He joined the British army in South Africa early in 1900, being attached to Kelly-Kenny's Division, and he was present at the surrender of Cronje's army. On the 30th August 1901 he left Pretoria in an armoured train which was attacked by a well-known Irish renegade train-wrecker called Jack Hinton (or Hindon); "the mine was exploded beneath the engine," and Vandeleur was shot "at two yards range . . . by a Boer named Uys."

A practical work which gives detailed accounts "of some patrols which have actually taken place during the South African War," together with criticisms on the manner in which they were carried out and "hints for the conduct of a reconnoitring patrol." The author, who was mentioned in Lord Roberts' despatch of September 4, 1901, was engaged after his South African experiences in "trying to instruct recruits, principally in Ireland, so that when they went out to South Africa they might know something about the principles of scouting," and Part II. of the pamphlet treats of the system recommended for training scouts.

Mr. Van Der Byl, a member of the Legislative Assembly of the Cape Colony, and (as he calls himself) a South African Boer farmer, decided to travel round the world, in order to gain knowledge concerning the more advanced systems of farming and agriculture adopted by other countries. He visited Tasmania, Victoria, and New South Wales, and proceeding to New Zealand, renewed his acquaintance with Sir George Grey, a former Governor of the Cape, who, he states, "spoke of the Dutch Boers as the greatest and best pioneers of the world." Returning to his own country, Mr. Van Der Byl came to the conclusion that the necessary improvements in South Africa "can only be brought about by more united efforts on the part of each colonist, and the rooting out of all bad national feeling."

One of the bitterest books on the Anglo-Boer War and question. Throughout the whole work an attempt is made to play on the sympathies of the American public, with a view of embroiling the United States with Great Britain, and every opportunity is taken to identify the position in South Africa with that in America during the War of Independence, and to inflame the Americans against the British. In addition to Mr. Van Der Hoogt's communication to the American people, there is "Mr. Steyn's Proclamation to the Orange Free State Burghers," "A Century of Injustice, a Message to the People of South Africa, sent by the Government of the South African Republic," together with the Conventions and other South African documents, and on the cover of the volume it is stated that it is "Published by Authority of the South African Republics."

The subject of the memoir was born at Rotterdam in 1748 and was educated at Leyden, and after leaving the University entered the army, remaining sixteen years in the service. He subsequently married and, quitting the army, studied for the medical profession at Edinburgh, and on his return to his native country he commenced practising as a physician at Middelburg. After some years he retired to Dort, "intending to employ the rest of his days in literary pursuits," &c., but losing his wife and daughter in an accident, he led an unsettled life for some period, but finally became attracted by the prospects of the London Missionary Society, and after some communication with the promoters, and the mutual prosecution of inquiries, he was appointed one of the missionaries to the Society, his colleagues being Messrs. Kicherer, Edmond, and Edwards. The four missionaries left for South Africa on the convict transport Hillsborough, which arrived at the Cape on March 31, 1799. Dr. Van Der Kemp commenced his journey into the interior on May 30th, and being permitted by King Gaika ("Gika") to enter the Kaffir country, interviewed the chief, who would not, however, allow a mission to be started, although the Doctor did his best during fifteen months to persuade him to alter his decision. He then proceeded to Graaff-Reinet, and later on reached Algoa Bay with his colleague, Mr. Read, in March 1802. Here, with the assistance of Governor Dundas, a settlement was formed at Bota's Place, about eight miles from the Bay, and a mission among the natives was established. On the restoration of the Cape to the Dutch, Governor Janssens visited the mission, and in compliance with his advice it was removed to the "Zwart Koph River." Much trouble, however, ensued with the neighbouring Boers, and finally some restrictions were placed on Bethelsdorp (as the new station was called), and ultimately the missionaries were asked to suspend their labours. When the Cape again passed into British hands, Sir David Baird gave his permission to the resumption of operations. The disputes with the neighbouring farmers, however, still went on, and Mr. Read laid formal complaints against them for their cruelty to the natives, which resulted in the appointment of a commission to inquire into these cases. Dr. Van Der Kemp died in Cape Town in the latter end of the year 1811, after having been engaged in missionary work in South Africa for thirteen years.

FAIRBRIDGE LIBRARY.

Brief Deduction of William Adrian Van Der Stel, late Councillor Extraordinary of India, and Governor of the Cape of Good Hope. In contradiction and refutation of all the accusations which certain freemen of the aforesaid Cape of Good Hope have made against him to the Honourable and Worshipful Directors of the East India Company.

The volume was printed in Holland shortly after the recall of Governor Adrian Van Der Stel in 1707, and has no title-page. Theal remarks of this work that it consists of the Governor's defence, "which is a document covering forty-four pages divided into verses similar to those of the Bible, and a number of official papers forming the Appendices. The work, though dull as anything well can be, is of great value to a student of Cape History of that period. . . . Van Der Stel shows that his accusers made many rash and untrue statements, but he has not succeeded in refuting the charges that his administration was oppressive to the colonists, and that he was carrying on extensive farming operations at the expense of the Company."

(VAN DER STEL, WILLEM ADRIAAN): Contra Deductie ofte Grondige Demonstratie van de valsheit der uitgegevene Deductie bij den Ed. Heer Willem Adriaan van der Stel, Geweezen Raad Extraordinaris der Nederlandsch India, en Gouverneur aan Cabo de Goede Hoop, &c. &c. &c., waarin niet alleen begrepen is een nauwkeurig Historisch Verhaal, van al't geene de Heer Van der Stel in den jare 1706 heeft werkstellig gemaakt, om de Vryburgeren aan de Kaap t' onder te brengen; maar ook een beknopt Antwoord op alles in gemelde Deductie, en deszelfs Schriftelyke Verantwoordinge, voorgestelde naakte uitvluchten, abuseerende bewysstukken en andere zaken meer, strekkende ter vindicatie van't klachtschrift in het jaar 1706 aan Haar Wel. Edele Hoog Achtbarheden de Heeren Bewinthebberen ter Illustre Vergadering van Zeventien afgezonden; zynde gesterkt door veele authentique en gerecolleerde Bewysstukken, waar van de origineele of authentique Copyen in handen hebben de twee Gemachtigden van eenige der Kaapsche Inwoonderen Jacobus van der Heiden en Adam Tas. (Amsterdam.) 304 pp. Folio. (1712.)

Contra deduction or thorough demonstration of the falsity of the Deduction published by the Hon. William Adrian Van Der Stel, late Councillor Extraordinary of Dutch India, and Governor of the Cape of Good Hope, wherein is not only contained an exact historical account of everything connected with Mr. Van Der Stel in the year 1706, in connection with his efforts to bring the Freeman at the Cape under undue pressure, clearly set forth; but also a concise answer to everything in the said Deduction, and the same set forth in a responsible paper in which is exposed its bare subterfuges and erroneous statements, and other matters of this nature, all tending to the vindication of the complaints made in the year 1706 to the Most Honourable the East India Company and sent to the Assembly of the Seventeen, strengthened by several authentic documents of which the original draft was prepared by the two attorneys of certain of the Cape Colonists, Jacob van der Heiden and Adam Tas.

This work has also no title-page, or name of printer, but it has some plates. Theal remarks of the volume that it "contains every particular of the charges of the Cape burghers against Governor Willem Adrian Van Der Stel, fortified with depositions and documents of like kind. It is therefore of the utmost value to a writer on Cape history. But a drearier volume to wade through, unless one is making the history of the time a special study, can hardly be imagined."

Impartial Ideas concerning a certain "short Deduction" which the Hon. Mr. William Adrian Van Der Stel thought fit to publish to account for his actions when Governor of the Cape of Good Hope.

"This is a volume of 147 pages . . . without author's name or place or date of publication being given. It is in a single chapter, divided into verses, and is so intolerably heavy that it can have had but few readers even at the time of the controversy. It bears upon the complaints of the Cape Burghers against Willem Adrian Van Der Stel, but contains no information which is not also given in the volumes already referred to." (Theal's "History of South Africa, 1486-1691.")

The volume is mentioned in Fairbridge and Noble's Catalogue (1886) as being in Mr. Fairbridge's Library, but no mention of it is made in the "Fairbridge Catalogue," 1904. See van Rieenen, Gevolgs (n. 557)

*VAN DER VLUGT, Dr. W.: Transvaal versus Great Britain. A short commentary upon the Dutch Address to the British People by Dr. W. Van der Vlugt, Professor at Leyden University. Amsterdam: J. H. Bussy. 40 pp. Roy. 8vo. 1899.

The author professes great admiration for Great Britain and her people, and observes, "Really, if mere national sympathy were our motive, we might well be in doubt which side to take . . . our deeply inborn sense of right and wrong . . . has been our only argument." With reference to the franchise question, it is readily admitted that both Kruger and Jorissen informed Her Majesty's Commissioners at the Peace Conference at Newcastle (May 1881), that "British subjects resident among the Boers should enjoy and would enjoy equal privileges with the citizens," but it is argued that no pledge was made that this law would not be altered, and the London Convention is absolutely silent on the matter. The alterations in the law had to be made in consequence of the discovery of gold, "which changed the face of Transvaal affairs to an extent no mortal eye could have foreseen three years before." It is maintained that "it is simply unfair to urge upon any one the exact fulfilment of a pledge after a total change of the situation," and it is pointed out that a distinguished British authority in Ethical Philosophy states that "even if a promise has been made quite freely and fairly, circumstances may alter so much before the time comes to fulfil it, that the effects of keeping it may be quite other than those which were foreseen when it was made. In such a case probably all would agree that the promisee ought to release the promiser."

The True Culprits. A letter to Mr. Ed. Tallichet, editor of the Bibliothèque Universelle and Revue Suisse. By W. Van Der Vlugt, Professor, Member of the Faculty of Equity at the University of Leyden.

A somewhat satirical letter advocating the cause of the Boers, which, it appears, was refused publication by M. Tallichet, the editor of the Bibliothèque Universelle. Mr. Van Der Vlugt asserts that he sent his MS. to the former asking him to publish it, stating that the "Netherlands Transvaal Committee" would pay for the expense, and that "Mr. Leyds' famous millions had nothing to do with the proposition," as there were plenty of people in Holland ready to subscribe money for a good cause. After a week's delay he sent the editor a telegram asking the brief question "Yes or No," to which M. Tallichet replied with equal brevity "No." The writer alludes to "le ci-devant 'clown': Barny Barnato," and to "the cruel butchery of the Matabeles for Mr. Rhodes' gain," ending his communication by inquiring whether the editor of the Bibliothèque Universelle and his compatriots were going to join issue against the simple heroes of Stormberg, Spytfontein, and Colenso, and take sides with "le duc aux diamants" of Kimberley and Rhodesia.

Afrikaner, know thyself! Historical and Romantic Sketches (founded on truth), by A. J. Van der Walt, Gatsrand (district Potchefstroom), South African Republic.

The volume is divided into three books characterised by much violent objurgation of the British. The headings of the sections are as follows:—

Book I. Boer or Briton? or the family, and the adventures of an Anglo-philic Afrikaner.

Book II. A Kalahari Drama. MORAL: No binding alliance should be made between an Afrikaner and any one of English descent.

Book III. Afrikaner, know thyself! Sketches of South African Burgher Life, founded on truth.

The work affords a remarkable example of the intense racial hatred fostered by some of the more biassed Boers, the author remarking (page 195) that "an Anglicised Afrikaner is in some respects worse than a Kaffir, with all his faults and defects, which are legion."

BRITISH MUSEUM LIBRARY.

The writer states that he believes the builders of Zimbabwe to have been Dravidians from the west coast of India, and he asserts that the words "Zimbabwe and Zambesi" are derived from an Indian language, and that "Zamba" is really "Samba," i.e. gold. Referring to the Ophir theory, Mr. Van Oordt observes, "The great cause of all the misunderstandings about both Ophir and Tarshish has been the neglect of the philological aspect of the subject."

The writer remarks that the essay "is the first tangible result of three years' close and unremitting study of the Bantu Question." Mr. Van Oordt states that the "real original home of the Bantu race is the Peninsula of Malacca," and he is of opinion that "there have been two Bantu invasions of Africa, and that the Bantu language belongs to the Ugro-Altaic group of tongues, which have arisen "from a mixture of Hamitic and Turanian elements."

Further memorial, prepared and presented to the Right Honourable . . . the directors of the Chartered East India Company of the Netherlands, at the meeting of the Seventeen in this town.

Jacobus Van Reenen, Barend Jacob Artois, Nicholas Godfried Heyns, and Tieleman Roos were elected to represent over four hundred dissatisfied burghers of the Cape Colony, and they "drew up a memorial of grievances and proposed remedies, which received the approval of their constituents . . . dated the 7th of May 1779." They then proceeded to Holland, and on laying the matter before the directors that body appointed a Committee to examine into the affair. This Committee did not report until four years had elapsed, during which period Roos died. The Assembly of Seventeen did little to appease the Burghers, who continued to send fresh Memorials to the Delegates without any great effect.

*VAN SICLEN, GEORGE W.: American Sentiment. A plebiscite upon the Boer War. (New York.) 22 pp. Roy. 8vo. 1900.

On May 22, 1900, the writer forwarded a circular letter "to the clergymen of the United States," asking them to record the votes of the members of their congregations and their acquaintances as to whether they were "in favour of the British or the South African Republics" with regard to the South African War, and as to whether they were in favour of offering mediation on the part of the United States of America, or of "Great Britain conquering" the Boer Republics. Up to June 12th he had received answers from about 2500 clergymen, and 106,830 votes were cast in favour of mediation, and 1345 in favour of "Great Britain conquering." Mr. Van Siclen asserts "that the great heart of the American people has been hurt by the wrong course pursued by the Government of Great Britain towards the two small independent republics of South Africa."

*VAN WARMELOW, DIETLOF: On Commando. By Dietlof Van

Warmelo. With a portrait. Methuen & Co., 36 Essex Street, W.C., London. Cr. 8vo. 1902.

The author was captured on April 3, 1901, while fighting with General De La Rey's forces, and was sent with other prisoners of war to Ahmednagar in India, and it is stated that he was the son of a clergyman in the Transvaal, and that the volume may be taken as truly representing the Afrikaner spirit, "which has been so much misconceived in England." The writer does not scruple to point out the faults of some of his comrades, and special mention is made of the looting at Dundee, a good deal of which is put down to the "Irish Corps," or some other corps of Uitlanders, "who joined us for the sake of booty," and were "largely responsible for the bad name we got." Referring to the capture of Pretoria he remarks, "What a bitter disappointment it was to find our Government had decided not to defend the town. . . . There were many who argued that the Government was corrupt, and that the war should have been prevented, or that the Boers did not want to fight." Mention is made of the opinion expressed by Mr. W. T. Stead to the effect that "forcing the Boers to take the oath of neutrality was against the Geneva Convention," but Van Warmelow does not seem to be certain of the correctness of Mr. Stead's views, as he observes, "We recognised a great fault in the character of our people. Without the slightest compunction they first fail in loyalty to their own country, and then break the oath of neutrality, although the enemy had in no single respect violated their part of the contract."

Ioaõ Baptista, e journa- | da que fez a gente, que della escapou, des- | de trinta, e tres graos no Cabo de Boa | Esperança, onde fez naufragio, | até Zofala, vindo sempre | marchando por terra. Por Francisco Vaz Dalmada. A Diogo Soares Secretario do conselho da fa- | zenda de sua Magestade, &c. Auzente. | Ao padre Manoel Gomez de Silueira. | Em Lisboa : | Por Pedro Craesbeeck, Impressor del Rei, Anno 1625. Title ; 41 leaves (82 pages). Cr. 8vo. 1625.

An account of the misfortune that befell the ship Sao João Baptista, and of the journey of those who escaped from the place where she was wrecked on the Coast of the Cape of Good Hope, in Latitude 33°, to Sofala, the whole of which journey was performed by land. By Francisco Vaz D'Almada. To Diogo Soares, Secretary of His Majesty's Council of the Treasury.

The St. John the Baptist left Goa on March 1, 1622, and had a long sea fight with some Dutch ships, but the vessel was in so bad a condition after meeting some severe storms that the captain ran her ashore on the Kaffrarian coast. In all 279 persons set out for Sofala, which was reached on July 28, 1623, by a small number of those who had set out on the journey nine months previously, as many of the women, the children, and the feeble had been left behind from time to time, and a large number had died from various causes. The narrative is an exceedingly sad one, but contains much information respecting the natives at this period. D'Almada and his surviving companions in distress eventually arrived at Mozambique, from which port they proceeded to Goa.

A complete account of this narrative, translated from the original Portuguese, will be found in Theal's "Records of South-Eastern Africa," vol. viii.

The Duke of Cornwall and York (afterwards Prince of Wales) visited

Cape Town in August 1901. This copy of the "Royal Number" is one of a limited "Edition de Luxe," and is bound in white satin, having green medallions representing Cape plants. The black and white illustrations are very interesting, and include portraits of Sir Hely and Lady Hutchinson. It is curious that throughout this number the name of the periodical is given as "Veldt," later issues being spelt "Veld."

The title of the book is a misnomer, for after constant travelling in South Africa for nearly five years, the Vescelius (or Vesalius) girls (as they were popularly called) did not get nearer to Zululand than Durban. The three sisters took part in a series of entertainments in Kimberley and other parts of Africa, being generally assisted by local amateurs, and their experiences are brightly and intelligently described. There is a very good account of Kimberley in 1880-1, and the sketches illustrating the volume are excellent.

Edition limited to 250 copies, of which Nos. 1-6 are on parchment. This copy is No. 96.

"An exact facsimile, with an interleaved translation, of an exceedingly rare Flemish book preserved in the British Museum Library." The work is entitled "Die reyse van Lissebone," and is a small quarto of twelve leaves, which appears to have escaped the notice of the "bibliographers of the literature relating to Vespucci." The latter accompanied the Viceroy Francisco D'Almeida in his voyage to India, 1505-6, and has left a quaint and curious account of the expedition. The first part of the tract contains "a general geographical description of the countries between Portugal and India and beyond, interspersed with curious ethnographical notes upon their various peoples and their manners and customs." The next part contains "the hitherto unidentified letter from Vespucci to Lorenzo de Pier Francisco de Medici, which professes to give an account of the voyage from Lisbon . . . in the form of a Journal." The editor states that the name of Vespucci is associated exclusively with the discovery of America, but points out that his references to Africa are of extreme interest. There is a curious account of Delagoa Bay, with a quaint engraving depicting the natives, and there are descriptions of the island of Quiloa, and remarks on Sofala, Mozambique, &c.

Cape Town : The South African Vigilance Committee. 8vo. 1900.

These pamphlets, together with some other productions of minor importance, were published by the " South African Vigilance Committee," mainly during the period between the fall of Bloemfontein and the declaration of peace (South African War, 1899-1902). The raison d'être of the association is explained as follows : South African Vigilance Committee. The Committee seeks to achieve the following objects :—

1. To collect and focus the views of all sections of South African citizens who are convinced of the essential justice of Sir Alfred Milner's policy.
2. To set forth to the British Public the necessity for the prosecution of the present war to a thoroughly successful termination.
3. To make it clear to the citizens of the Empire in the United Kingdom and in the colonies that the continuance of the independence of the Republican States in any form must endanger the permanent settlement and peaceful progress in South Africa, and would lead to greater trouble than any we have hitherto experienced.
4. To counteract misleading statements made by the anti-British press or by the emissaries or supporters of the Republics in favour of any settlement short of annexation.
5. To organise public demonstrations, at suitable times and in suitable places, in support of the policy for the incorporation of the Republics in the British Empire.
6. To supply literature to the various political organisations in the United Kingdom or elsewhere, and to disseminate information among our Dutch fellow-colonists as to the aim and scope of British policy.

7. To raise a fund to be called the South African Imperial Defence fund, to be used solely for the promotion of the above object. No portion of the fund shall be available for contested elections or for any political party purposes in South Africa."

London: Green & Co. xvii + 196 pp. Cr. 8vo. 1880.

The experiences of a young Hollander trader in Zululand during the war with Cetywayo. Mr. Vijn had resided for over four years in South Africa when he wrote his journal, and during the greater part of this period he had been engaged in trading in Zululand. His work throws some light on the character and conduct of the Zulu king, and appears to be written in an entirely unbiassed manner. More than half the volume consists of notes contributed by Bishop Colenso, which afford considerable information regarding the state of the country and its inhabitants at this period.

- *VILJOEN, General BEN J.: My Reminiscences of the Anglo-Boer War. By General Ben Viljoen (late Assistant Commandant-General of the Transvaal Forces, and Member for Johannesburg in the Transvaal Volksraad). Popular Edition. London: Hood, Douglas & Joward. . . . 313 pp. 8vo. 1903.

In humorously alluding to the fabulous tales about him which had appeared in the British papers, the General remarks that "after the several coups de grace in the field, and the tragic execution at De Aar . . . all which is left of Ben Viljoen . . . still pans out at a fairly robust young fellow—quite an ordinary young fellow indeed, thirty-four years of age, of middle height and build," although a periodical narrated how, bound to a chair, and placed near his open grave, he had met his doom with "rare stoicism and fortitude." . . . The work is free from bitterness, and is characterised by a fairness and lack of bragging which favourably distinguishes it from other publications written from the Boer point of view, while the humour, candour, and good-nature displayed in the volume are undeniable. The author was instructed by General Joubert to proceed to the Natal frontier, and he subsequently joined the troops under General Kock's command. He does not appear to have had a high opinion of his leader, and remarks, possibly if we "had had less to do with arrogant and stupid old men, we should have reached Cape Town or Durban." From time to time he expresses his discontent with most of the Boer Generals of the old school, and he was extremely impatient of their super-caution, credulity, and superstition, which brought him on several occasions to the verge of insubordination, whilst at times he considered that he had been slighted by Joubert, who appears to have been dubious as to the courage of the leader and his Johannesburg men. Viljoen is far more honest as to the Boer losses than other writers on the Boer side, and makes no secret of the fact that large numbers of the Burghers had British proclivities, especially at the end of the war, although he is very bitter about the "handsuppers," some of whom—contrary to the general opinion—were women. These people were regarded by the General as traitors, and there is an account of the "execution" of Meyer De Kock who came to Viljoen's camp to induce his men to surrender, and who, it is stated, was the first man who first suggested to the British authorities the establishment of concentration camps. The Boer General defends the blowing up of trains, which he considered quite as justifiable as the burning of houses, and was, he asserts, no doubt as distasteful to him as the latter was to Lord Kitchener. Viljoen was captured by Major Orr, after an engagement in which two of his adjutants were killed. According to "After Pretoria" (by H. W. Wilson), the Boer leader was tried by a British Court Martial on the charge of breaking the laws of war, but he was acquitted; nothing of this, however, is mentioned in this volume. He was sent to St. Helena on February 19th, and speaks with some dissatisfaction of his treatment on the island.

VILLARAIS, J.; and TALLICHET, Ed.: Le Sens de la Guerre Sud-Africaine. Lausanne: . . . Bibliothèque Universelle. 380 pp. Cr. 8vo. 1902.

BRITISH MUSEUM LIBRARY.

The volume is a study of the causes of the South African War and of public opinion during its continuance. The Preface is signed by J. Villaraix, of the "Bibliothèque Universelle et Revue Suisse," and states that the Boers "in fighting to maintain the servitude of the Blacks have become for the mob the champions of liberty"; it is asserted that the only French journals opposed to the general Anglophobia were Le Siècle and La Bibliothèque Universelle.

Authorised translation from the "Paris Liberté," by Frederic Lees. With a Preface by E. M. De Vogüé, Member of the Académie Française. London: Adam & Charles Black. xx+283 pp. 8vo. 1901.

Villebois seems to have been thoroughly disillusioned before he lost his life at Boshof; a brave and skilful soldier, he appears to have been disgusted with the procrastination of the Boers, and their want of decision, resolution, and union. He thought well of the abilities of De La Rey, but considered that Joubert was a mere politician. He seems to have had a great contempt for the British army and officers before the arrival of Lords Roberts and Kitchener, but speaks of the presumption of the Republicans in thinking that they would defeat these generals as easily as they did some of the previous leaders. He criticises Buller's operations, but continually draws attention to the very marked "carefulness" of the burghers, of whom he says, "The Boer's first concern is for his safety."

The speaker discussed the operations of troops "in the West," the Natal army, and the defence of Ladysmith and Kimberley, referring specially to "the feeding of the army," the medical arrangements, criticisms passed on the Generals, and the British and Colonial volunteers, together with remarks on the "enemy," the "Boer teaching of the art of war," and the points of weakness displayed by the Boer troops. He appealed to the "South African League, to the Progressive or Imperial Party in Cape Colony, and to the leaders of thought in Johannesburg and Kimberley, not to aggravate the difficulties of the situation, not to encourage, nay to repress, any excess of language or action, to restrain by every means in their power all mob excesses, and everything which may make a lasting peace more difficult of attainment, having regard to all the local circumstances of race and population. . . ."

The writer remarks that amongst the lessons the Volunteers should learn from their experiences in the war are those referring to "lack of preparation in time of peace, lack of effective training for modern battle, lack of opportunity for practising rifle shooting, lack of space to drill, the necessity for better scouting, for greater mobility, for the organisation of Mounted Infantry."

It is stated that "the Volunteer Force of Great Britain sent, without the slightest legal, or indeed moral necessity, 594 officers (and) 19,472 non-commissioned officers and men" to the South African War. "With the exception of the City Imperial Volunteers, with 59 officers and 1667 non-commissioned officers and men, the whole of the above . . . received only soldiers' pay and soldiers' rations, and were treated absolutely and entirely as regular soldiers, under like discipline and like conditions in every respect." In addition to the above, "10,000 officers and non-commissioned officers and men from the volunteer force joined the Imperial Yeomanry . . . making a total contribution . . . of over 35,000 members." The extracts were collated by the Volunteer Service Gazette, and were "republished by permission of that journal as a record important to the country and gratifying to the Volunteer Force."

*VINCENT, Sir HOWARD : The Situation in South Africa. Further personal observations and impressions ; being a continuation of the special address of April 1900, and subsequent discussion. Roy. 8vo. 1902.

In the course of this address, Sir Howard stated that "we owe no small measure of gratitude to the Hon. W. P. Schreiner," whose efforts "had an undoubtedly restraining influence" over the Cape Dutch in the early stages of the war. He considered that it would be necessary, when hostilities were brought to a close, to retain "a force of not less than 100,000 men . . . in South Africa."

Ten Months in a Women's (Concentration) Camp. Life and Sufferings of a Boer Family in the Transvaal during the late War with England.

A romance, stated to be based on facts, with regard to the incidents related referring to the war and the Concentration Camps. On the cover is a somewhat blood-curdling representation of a body of British troops forcibly removing an invalid Boer woman from a farm in an ox-cart, while the farm-house is depicted in the background as bursting into flames.

Narrative of ten years' travels in the East Indies, undertaken by Johann Wilhelm Vogel, formerly sub-lieutenant and Mine Inspector in the service of the Most Honourable the Netherlands East India Company, but now Clerk of the Exchequer and Superintendent of Mines for the Prince of Saxony at Altenburg. Divided into three parts, of which the first is an account of the author's departure for Holland and the East Indies, with a report of many places, and remarkable matters that occurred to him. The second deals with the services of the author in India, and describes most of the plants, animals, fruits, and mines of the country. The third and last describes the return journey from India to Holland and Germany, with an appendix relating to the position and customs of the most celebrated kingdoms and lands of India. All described from the author's own experiences, or from notes taken from conversations carefully preserved in a record available for the purposes of this production.

Vogel arrived at the Cape on his outward voyage on the 18th of April, 1679, and devoted over thirty pages of his work to an interesting account of the settlement and the Hottentots. He called at Cape Town on his homeward voyage in 1688. A second edition was published in 1716.

Africa (1795–1845). By J. C. Voigt, M.D., of the Cape Colony Volunteer Ambulance Service in the Transvaal in 1881. In two volumes. London: T. Fisher Unwin, Paternoster Square. Vol. I. xxvii + 350 pp.; Vol. II. ix + 316 pp. 8vo. 1899.

The writer presents the case of the emigrant farmers against the Colonial authorities and the British Government, the account of Slachter's Nek rebellion being remarkable for the amount of vituperation expressed, by the characterisation of the insurgents as heroes, and by the complaint that "The very School Primers on South African history have, for a great part of this century, taught the officially trained youth of Cape Colony that the Bezuidenhouts were 'rebels' and 'outlaws.'" Mr. Voigt remarks that "They, the doughty champions of the veld, at least knew how to die when their time came. What can be said of those mock heroes of the present-day South African Imperialism . . . those great leaders who hoodwinked and deceived their followers, led them to slaughter, and then in the hour of danger saved their own skins by surrender." The majority of the writers of South African History, including Noble, Wilmot, and Chase, Moffat and Livingstone, are accused of misrepresenting the emigrant farmers on the subject of their attitude regarding the Slave Question, and it is remarked that "Neither Moffat nor Livingstone ever had a good word for the old Colonists of South Africa and for 'the Boers.'" Even Theal and Cloete do not escape censure, having had the temerity to descant for a moment on the execution of Tambusa, the ambassador of Dingan, by the emigrant farmers, and to question the honour and justice of the proceeding. The volumes teem with violent criticism of the British Policy in South Africa, and the appendix, which is written in heroics of a highly hysterical character, ends with the following lines: "Does the widowed mother; do the sorrow-stricken parents whose sons—deceived and sent to slaughter by the Mammon Colossus—now lie in those nameless graves of Doornkop; do the white bleached bones on the hillsides of Matabele—and Mashonaland; do the victims of the Moloch of Modern Imperialism; do they all now appeal in vain to Heaven for retribution? Hark! The bells are tolling their warning in the great echoing belfry of the temple of History. Is it only a warning? or are they sounding the death-knell of an Empire?"

This pamphlet is characterised by great bitterness against Great Britain, the author, who resided a few months at Bloemfontein, declaiming against the "odious and infamous" war; . . . "Imperialism," he asserts, "is only a new phase of capitalistic exploitation." Count Tolstói evidently did not approve of Prince Volkonsky's unmitigated condemnation of Great Britain, and remarks in his letter, "When I am told that no matter in what war that has broken out, one of the belligerents is exclusively in the fault, I am not able to admit it. . . . Such are the reasons which prevent me from being in accord with you in accusing the blind instruments of ignorance and evil, for I see the causes of wars in the course of events of which I am in part responsible."

Met het Portret van

den schrijver. Vierde Druk. Te Amsterdam, bij H. Höveker. xvi + 219 pp. 8vo. 1867.

The remarkable narrative of the life and adventures of Michael Christian Vos, preacher of the Reformed Christian Community, in various localities in Dutch South Africa and Asia, from his youth to the time of his superannuation, written by him in the year 1819, and communicated to a friend in a series of letters. With a portrait of the Author. Fourth edition.

Michael Christian Vos was born in Cape Town on December 31, 1759, and after receiving a preliminary education at the Cape, proceeded in the year 1780 to Holland to study divinity. Returning to South Africa in 1794, he was appointed minister at Roodezand, but in 1802 he left this place for England, where he entered the service of the London Missionary Society. He went to Ceylon and Madras, again returning to the Cape in 1809. He was then called to the position of minister to the Swartberg (afterwards Caledon) community, where he remained till his superannuation in 1818, when he took up his residence in Roodesand (Tulbagh). The volume, though embracing a period of great interest in South African History, throws very little light on the social or political features of the time, and is mainly confined to religious matters.

London : Macmillan and Co., Limited. New York : The Macmillan Company. 127 pp. 8vo. 1903.

An abridgment of the first edition. The author states that the title of the book was adopted at the suggestion of the Duke of Cornwall and York (afterwards Prince of Wales), from an unusual motto which was amongst the decorations of the railway station at Durban. The Imperial tour, of which this is a description, was decided on mainly with a view to enable a Prince of the Royal House to open the newly established Parliament of the Commonwealth of Australia. Later on it was resolved that the tour should be extended to other colonies, but the whole scheme seemed to be threatened by the death of Queen Victoria. King Edward, however, resolved that the tour should not be abandoned, and the selected vessel, the Ophir, an Orient liner, was regularly commissioned and put into thorough order, sailing with the Royal travellers on March 16, 1901. Great preparations had been made throughout South Africa to welcome the guests, but only a few towns could be visited, as war still prevailed. After short trips to Durban and Maritzburg the voyage was proceeded with to Simon's Bay, and there is a full account of the reception in Cape Town, with an ode of welcome by Edgar Wallace. The Duke received many of the native chiefs, also a party of Boer prisoners who wished to pay their respects.

These letters were originally published in the Daily Mail, and contain many lively and humorous sketches of the war. There are sly hits against the Afrikanders who would not fight for the Boers, but who provided them with everything they wanted, and then sent in claims for compensation to the British Government, and throughout the volume there is severe censure for the double dealing practised by the Boer sympathisers all over the Cape Colony. There is also a description of the execution of the train-wreckers who were shot at De Aar, and an account (entitled "In Death's Eye") of an expedition on the railway line resulting in the discovery and destruction of some of the machines employed for the purpose of blowing up trains by roving bands of Boer guerillas.

Juta & Co., Cape Town, Port Elizabeth, Johannesburg. xxx + 552 pp. 8vo. 1896.

The author was invited by the Government of the Cape Colony through their Agent-General, Sir Charles Mills, to report on the resources of the colony in the interests of agriculture and farming. He spent four months in South Africa, devoting most of his time to the study of the industries of the Cape Colony, and the scope of the work includes forestry, viticulture, fruit growing, agriculture, ostrich farming, and information respecting the breeding of cattle, sheep, horses, mules, and small stock. There are also some chapters on the wild game of the country, and the diseases of cattle, sheep, and swine. There is a historical preface by Harry Stratford Caldecot of Johannesburg, which includes a list of important events in South African History, touching slightly on the political and social position of the country at large.

In the main, the views expressed were by no means sanguine, and the address was subjected to considerable criticism in the subsequent discussion.

With reference to Rhodesia, it is maintained that "the fact is established beyond all question that we have at last discovered one of the great gold-producing centres of ancient days in the southern portion of the continent."

An account of the "war of the axe" written by the wife of an officer in the 91st regiment, who resided on the frontier during the period of the hostilities. The remarks in his "History of South Africa, 1834-1854," "The leading events of that war are faithfully described, and a correct view is given of the occurrences that led to it. . . . Much sympathy is displayed for the suffering colonists, though as to the ill-feeling between the Burghers and soldiers the part of the latter is decidedly taken." Mrs. Ward observes that much mischief had resulted from the misrepresentation of affairs in Kaffir-land by interested persons, and says, "At such a distance . . . how are people to distinguish truth from fiction? A Governor at the Cape of Good Hope should be empowered to act . . . according to immediate circumstances, and not have his hands tied till long-expected ships come in with despatches when the mischief is done." Wherever you go, from Cape Town to the neutral territory, every one concurs in saying that, had Sir Benjamin D'Urban's measures been carried out, all would have gone well. He would have completed such arrangements as would have made the Boers our friends instead of our enemies. . . ." In the appendix to Volume II. will be found a manifesto published by Sir Harry Smith in reference to his proclamations, declaring the "Sovereignty of Her Majesty" over the territory beyond the Orange River.

The editor remarks in the Preface that "the excitable writer, justly indignant at the effects of a system he had had no opportunity of examining on the spot, placed the truth in so broad a light as to incur the risk of being misjudged and denounced as a bitter opponent of the wrong party, rather than accepted as a pleader in favour of the right one." It is stated that the tone of the work has been modified, and Mrs. Ward observes: "I have been able to rescue from blame many right-minded men, who heartily deprecate the mischief done by certain members of the communities to which they belong."

- *WARREN, Lieut.-General Sir CHARLES: Boundary Line between the Orange Free State and Griqua-Land West. By Brevet Lieut.-Colonel Charles Warren, C.M.G., R.E. "Royal Engineers' Occasional Papers." Paper VI. Pp. 99-147. 2 maps. 8vo. 1882.

The memorandum of agreement between Earl Carnarvon and his Honour President Brand of the Orange Free State, providing for a joint survey of the boundary line between the Republic and Griqualand West, was drawn up on July 13, 1876, and on October 3rd Captain Warren sent in a preliminary report on the work necessary, together with two estimates of the expenditure. The land to be surveyed embraced "the eastern limit of the Diamond Fields, which have to be included in British territory, and also the western limits of the four farms occupied by Commandant Dolf Erasmus and the farm belonging to Gideon Joubert, which have to be excluded from British territory," and among the details of the proposed work was a "special survey of Kimberley." The estimates, which were reckoned at £4000 and £5000 per annum respectively, were amended by the Colonial Office to a fixed sum for the service, and £2500 was set aside for the purpose. Captain Warren accepted the commission, and arrived at the Cape on November 20, 1876. Of his journey up country he remarks, "I was principally struck with the . . . lowering aspect of all the Kaffirs and Hottentots we met. I saw not one happy expression on the face of a native until crossing the Orange River, and arriving within the limits of the Orange Free State." Reaching Kimberley, he was introduced by Major Lanyon, then Administrator, to his colleague, Mr. Joseph E. De Villiers, who represented the Republic. The author gives a very interesting sketch of Griqualand West as it appeared at this period, but very little is said respecting the Diamond Fields. The work of the survey was completed on April 24, 1877, and the plans commenced. Captain Warren was invited by President Brand to a dinner given by him to the Volksraad, May 17th, of which he relates the following: "At this time there was a very strong feeling against England in the Orange Free State, in consequence of the annexation of Griqua-Land West and the Transvaal, and there was some hesitation about proposing her Majesty's health coupled with Great Britain and Ireland amongst the other toasts, it being supposed that whoever responded would not be received favourably." In the event the toast was proposed as usual and "was received with acclamation, and cordiality was for the time restored." The author concludes by stating, "I have a most pleasant recollection of the Boers about the boundary line who, although they viewed with the greatest disfavour the incorporation of their lands into British territory, were always on the most friendly terms with our survey parties, and with many of whom I have formed lasting friendships."

- *WARREN, Lieut.-General Sir CHARLES: Our Portion in South Africa (Bechuanaland). In vol. xvii., "Proceedings of the Royal Colonial Institute," pp. 5-45. 8vo. 1885.

The territory which formed the subject of Sir Charles Warren's paper comprised "a portion of Bechuanaland and a portion of the Kalahari," extending "from lat. 29, north of the Cape Colony, to lat. 22, and from long. 20 east, to the Borders of the Transvaal Republic . . . in extent about 170,000 square miles, being somewhat larger than the Republic of the Transvaal, and somewhat smaller than the Cape Colony. . . ." The speaker gave a short historical sketch of the country and its inhabitants, with some account of the "recent historical events," and of the expedition which he commanded. He stated that "Mr. Rhodes cancelled all Mr. MacKenzie's acts on behalf of the Imperial Government, again hoisted the Stellaland Republic flag, and agreed to give the Stellanders, without distinction, the grants of farms in Stellaland which they received in the land register from David Massouw; in doing this he created all the subsequent difficulties which Mr. MacKenzie, with sagacity and foresight in his proposals, had completely avoided."

The biographical sketch states that Sir Charles Warren was born at Bangor on February 7, 1840, and joined the army in 1857. From 1867 to 1870 the War Office lent his services to the Palestine Exploration Fund, and his discoveries in the Holy Land were of the utmost importance. Later on he was sent to South Africa to survey the boundary line between the Orange Free State and Griqualand West; and he was afterwards appointed Special Commissioner for the latter colony, being made Acting Administrator to Griqualand West after taking part in the Gaika and Griqua wars. Leaving South Africa in 1880 he saw service in Egypt, but was again sent to the Cape in 1884, this time in command of the Bechuanaland expedition. On his return to England he was ordered to Suakim, soon after which he accepted the position of Chief Commissioner of Police (1886-1888). He filled other important posts in England, and on the outbreak of the South African War (1899) was appointed to the command of the 5th division, sailing for South Africa on November 25th. The volume gives a detailed account of Sir Charles Warren's connection with the Natal campaign, and the circumstances attending the occupation and evacuation of Spion Kop. The writer asserts that Sir Redvers Buller was responsible for the appointment of Lt.-Colonel Thorneycroft as officer in command of the hill. Sir Charles, "it is stated on very good authority," was forbidden to lead the attack, but was nevertheless censured by Lord Roberts for not visiting Spion Kop, while he was in fact occupying "a central position whence he could issue orders to right and left, and be in communication with the Commander-in-Chief." He was given no long-range guns to reply to those of the Boers, and Thorneycroft gives this prominently as a reason for retiring, which he did without consulting his superiors in rank, and against the advice of those around him. There are a number of extracts from despatches which represent the affair from the varied points of view of Lord Roberts, Sir Redvers Buller, Sir Charles Warren, Lt.-Col. Thorneycroft, and Major-General Talbot Coke.

- *WARREN, Lieut.-General Sir CHARLES: Cecil Rhodes' Early Days in South Africa. . . . Ex. "The Contemporary Review," No. 437, pp. 643-654. Roy. 8vo. May, 1902.

It is stated that the policy of the acquisition of the hinterland was inculcated long before Rhodes came into prominence, and that a direct resolution recommending the extension of the boundaries of Griqualand West was passed by the Legislative Council of that province on January 27, 1874; both Sir George Grey and Sir Bartle Frere being in favour of the extension of British rule in the direction of the north. There is a short account of the events in Bechuanaland and Stellaland at the time of the expedition, and the services of Mr. Rhodes are fully admitted, but it is suggested that they were wholly in the interests of the Cape Colony without regard (at this period) to the welfare of the British Empire. With reference to Griqualand West, it is asserted that the writer advocated confederation and Mr. Rhodes annexation, and that their politics were quite opposed in other matters respecting South Africa. Sir Charles alludes to "the coquetting of many Englishmen with the Afrikander Bond," and remarks, "This accounts for the weak position taken up by the Cape politicians in striving for the unification of South Africa from Cape Town. It is simply a miserable compromise. It can mean but one thing in the end, viz., the adoption of Dutch sentiment throughout South Africa."

*WARREN, Lieut.-General Sir CHARLES: On the Veldt in the Seventies. . . . London: Isbister & Co., Limited. . . . x + 404 pp. 8vo. 1902.

The work consists of four parts, which include:—

1. Laying the Boundary-line from the Orange to Vaal Rivers.
2. From the Diamond Fields to Delagoa Bay.
3. From Cape Town to Kimberley.
4. The Land Settlement of Griqualand West.

Some of these subjects were dealt with in early pamphlets or magazine articles, but the information afforded is far more complete in the present volume.

The diary kept during the author's first stay in Griqualand West is full of valuable information respecting the country, the Boers, the natives, and the diggers, and Sir Charles appears to have been very successful in making friends of the Boers, who were at first by no means inclined to be friendly or hospitable, in fact they had to be threatened with the law before they would provide his party with the necessities of life. With regard to Sir Owen Lanyon, Sir Charles states that he was misjudged in the Transvaal, and that in reality he did his best to smooth matters, and it is pointed out that in a letter dated May 15, 1877, Sir Owen wrote, "I think in the present state of affairs we ought to do everything in our power to conciliate the Boers, and try to alter their prejudice against our rule." During his journey to Delagoa Bay, Warren had plenty of opportunities of judging the feeling of the Boers with regard to the annexation of the Transvaal, and he asserts that in the main they seemed to regret the "downfall of the Republic, but yet agreed it would be good for trade"; and in his opinion the constant misunderstandings between the British and the Boers were due to the fact that they did not speak the same language. On the journey from Cape Town to Kimberley the author met with Cecil Rhodes, and it is mentioned that the coming statesman was busied with studying the 39 articles; they travelled together most of the way, and it is stated that even in these early days Rhodes appears to have had very definite ideas on certain subjects, and had formed his own opinion that "one cannot get at the real views of the Boers by speaking to them."

The black scenes of our history, which we would gladly erase, are of a later period." Mr. Watermeyer was of opinion that the "Trekking system, with its atten-

The domination of the company lasted 143 years, and the system of "crushing monopoly repressed all energy and progress." At the commencement of the period when their operations were inaugurated, "the energy of these traders of a small continent, who founded empires and divided the command of the sea, merits admiration. But their principles were false, and the seeds of corruption were early sown. . . . For the last fifty years at least of their rule . . . there is little to which . . . our records can point with satisfaction . . . some national feeling may have lingered; but substantially, every man in the country, of every hue, was benefited when the incubus of the tyranny of the Dutch East India Company was removed."

Egidius Benedictus Watermeyer was born in Cape Town on the 21st of August 1824. His parents were people of culture and education, and their children received careful training and instruction. At the age of seventeen, Mr. Watermeyer proceeded to England, and was entered at the Inner Temple, and in 1847 he was called to the English Bar, and admitted an advocate of the Supreme Court of the Colony. In 1854 he was elected as member for Worcester in the first Cape Parliament, but he retired in 1855, and some time after was raised to the Bench. As a judge he was distinguished by "accuracy of thought, logical power, (and) clear memory; . . . added to these was the power of expressing himself in the most terse and concise language." His literary abilities were of a high order, and "by reading and study he kept well abreast of what was going on in the world." Mr. Justice Watermeyer died in the prime of his life in the year 1867, after suffering many domestic griefs during the latter part of his life. The volume contains a biographical sketch (signed J. With maps and illustrations. London : John Murray. . . . ix + 280 pp. 8vo. 1904.

The essential object of the volume "is the instruction of the German officer," and thus "the criticisms it contains . . . point out . . . not only our alleged faults and errors, but show also what, in the opinion of the General Staff at Berlin we ought to have done." It is stated in the Preface that "The works issued by the Military History section of the Great General Staff have dealt hitherto chiefly with events in which the German army took part. . . . Now that Germany has also become a colonial Power, it seems not unimportant to draw attention to non-European wars, in order to sift and adapt the experiences gained by other armies." The work is characterised by the thoroughness which is so prominent a feature of German productions of this class, and despite constant criticisms of the British methods and military tactics, is written in a perfectly fair and unbiassed manner, the translator observing that the volume will be welcomed by the public as well as by the experts as a history "which by its conciseness, its strict impartiality, and its lucidity can hardly fail to interest and instruct all who have studied the subject of the war in South Africa." In view of the attacks on the conduct of the British troops made by a small selection of fellow-countrymen as well as by Anglophobes all over the continent, the following extract from this volume is valuable as a record. . . . "It is the duty of a truth-loving historical account, compiled from a knowledge of the actual circumstances, to lay stress upon the fact that the behaviour of the British was as chivalrous and humane as that of the Boers always was, so long as they were opposed by the regular Boer forces, which were distinguishable as such." In a footnote to the above paragraph it is observed that "A German officer, who fought on the side of the Boers and was taken prisoner, states: 'The treatment meted out to us by the British officers and soldiers was thoroughly friendly and humane, and not only the officers but also the Tommies behaved as perfect gentlemen towards the prisoners.'"

Some account of the views of an Englishman who became a naturalised citizen in the Transvaal, and who represented Barberton in the Second Volksraad, being the first Englishman elected to a seat in that body. Mr. Watkins states that when he "first entered the Transvaal in 1873-4, the Uitlanders had the full franchise after a year's residence, and in 1875 the Leydenburg goldfields sent Mr. Cameron, an American, and Mr. Piper to the First Volksraad, while in the following year the members were Mr. Herbert Rhodes, a brother of Cecil Rhodes, and an Irishman named Armstrong." The opinion is expressed that the Dutch and English would be able to work very well together in the Transvaal if the Uitlanders exercised a little more patience with the President and his Government, and it is maintained that the charges of corruption against the officials had been exaggerated, and the removal of Chief Justice Kotze misrepresented. In a letter to the Times, dated May 30, 1899, Mr. Watkins observes, "Let Englishmen remember that there is a Transvaal side as well as a Uitlander, and let England uphold her tradition for equity and justice, and show some reasonable consideration for a weak state struggling to maintain its liberty."

An attack on the policy of the British Government in South Africa with respect to the first annexation of the Transvaal and the Zulu War. With regard to the latter it is asserted that "The English people are engaged in a strange enterprise in South Africa. They are deliberately and of malice aforethought compassing the subjugation and possible extermination of a gallant though savage people." The pamphlet, which was translated into French by the "Central Committee for the Interests of the Transvaal," enumerates the reasons given for the annexation, and endeavours to prove that these were founded on statements which were either untrue or misrepresented.

*WATTS-DUNTON, THEODORE : The Rhodes Memorial at Oxford. The Work of Cecil Rhodes. A Sonnet-Sequence. By Theodore Watts-Dunton. . . . London : Henry Frowde. 40 pp. Quarto. 1907.

These sonnets were penned upon the occasion of the unveiling of the Rhodes Memorial at Oxford on June 12, 1907, when Lord Rosebery, in a speech of great beauty, threw some light on Mr. Rhodes' ideas with regard to "posthumous fame," references to which will be found in the Introduction. The eight poems form a graceful tribute to the memory of the South African statesman, and in the notes at the end of the volume will be found an interesting account of the obsequies at the Matoppo, together with some description of Mr. Rhodes' celebrated "indaba" with the Matabele chiefs, at which peace was agreed on.

Pp. 294-350 contain an account of the part he took in the South African War, 1899-1902, and his death at Magersfontein when attacking Cronje's position.

The author observes, "It was as a plain regimental officer, . . . not as a 'hero' or commander, that Wauchope's military reputation was made. His was the nature which entirely and unquestionably sinks self in its endeavour for the general weal."

During a residence of eighteen years the writer had studied the attitude of the British to the Portuguese, at first, it is stated, with some prejudice against the latter, and had come to the conclusion "that whatever their errors, misconduct, or folly," the British were not justified in their career of "calumny and ingratitude" to their neighbours.

The diary was commenced after the Bishop arrived at Lobengula's Kraal, Enkanwini, in May 1888, and affords considerable information respecting the country and its natives, the white pioneers, and the missionaries. Bishop Webb had several interviews with the Matabele chief in order to induce him to grant his permission to establish mission stations in Mashonaland, which, however, was not afforded. A visit was, nevertheless, paid to the country about the middle of June, and there is an interesting account of the expedition, in the course of which the country was penetrated as far as Zumbo on the Zambesi River. On the return journey another visit was paid to Lobengula at Umvutja, after which the author returned to Mafeking, where he arrived on December 5th.

The speaker considered that mutual respect between the English and Dutch in South Africa was necessary "for happy social relations and for progress side by side," and he asserted that the "Transvaal War undoubtedly had the effect . . . of securing respect for the Dutch burgher, who startled and surprised the despisers of his race by his exhibition of courage, and skill, and resolution." Bishop Webb commented on the social development of the inhabitants of South Africa, dealing specifically with the British and Dutch colonists, the home-born emigrants, the half-castes, and the Kaffirs, and was of opinion that one of the weak points of South African social development is that the Cape "is not generally regarded as a permanent home, especially by our wealthier merchants and successful business men."

The author, who resided for many years in the Orange Free State and the Cape Colony, remarks on the cordial relations which had existed between himself and the officials of the Free State. With regard to the ultimate settlement after the war, he considered it would not be wise to allow the two republics to start afresh as independent states, and was of opinion that the English and Dutch would live easier side by side under the British flag than under the nominal independence of the Republics. He puts down the war to the failure of the Boers to keep "the covenants solemnly entered into with us to secure justice and liberty," and asserts that the question of settlement has "an important bearing upon the future of the native races." Quotations are given from several letters from Kaffir clergymen, and from speeches delivered at meetings of natives, all of which are in favour of British rule throughout South Africa.

Leipzig : F. A. Brockhaus. (2 vols.) 8vo. 1878.

One of the brightest and best of German works dealing with the continent of Africa. Although published much later than other works dealing with the discovery of the Diamond Fields, the author was quite an early visitor at the diggings, and arrived at Pniel in July 1871. His account of the early days of the Diamond Industry is one of the best that has been written, and he paints with distinct vividness the vicissitudes of the pioneer diggers. Von Weber had claims in what were known as No. 5 and No. 8 Roads in Kimberley Mine, and he sold these properties for £800, but was somewhat disconcerted at finding that the purchaser soon found several valuable diamonds in them. He gives full particulars of the alluvial and the dry diggings, the riots of the claim-holders, the recreations of the camps, and the general life of the fields. Practically the whole of the first part of the work is devoted to an account of the diamond diggings, while the second portion deals with Basutoland, the Orange Free State, Natal, the Transvaal, and other parts of South Africa. There is a folding view of Colesberg Kopje (Kimberley Mine), and a plan of the Kimberley Mine, dated August 1874, arranged in colours to show the value of the claims for purposes of assessment.

Although the work is little known in England and the South African Colonies, it forms an important contribution to publications relating to South Africa at this period, more especially with regard to the early history of the Diamond Fields

History of the Emigrant Boers, and of the War of Independence. By Commandant J. D. Weilbach and C. N. J. Du Plessis.

This volume describes the "Great Trek" of Dutch-speaking colonists who left the Cape Colony during 1836 and subsequent years, with an account of their history from that time until the retrocession of the Transvaal in 1881. The grievances against the British are duly put on record, the principal points being the method of the abolition of slavery and the Slachter's Nek tragedy, which, with other matters, embittered the Dutch farmers. There is a narrative of the adventures of various parties which set out, and an account of the attack on Retief and his party by Dingan, and of a battle between the Boers under Potgieter and Piet Uys, and the Zulus. Details are given concerning the campaign between the Boers and the British in Natal for the possession of that colony, which the former claimed by right of conquest and treaty, and which led to the evacuation of the territory by the Boers. The next dispute with the British was brought about by the Proclamation of Sir Harry Smith, Governor of the Cape Colony, annexing to the British Crown the land afterwards known as the Orange River Sovereignty, and this resulted in the submission of the Boers after their defeat at the battle of Boomplaats. Some time after, the Sand River Convention acknowledged the independence of the Transvaal Boers (1852), the Orange River Sovereignty being evacuated by the British in 1854. Between this date and 1870 no disputes occurred with the English Government, but there were constant disturbances with the natives and between the two Republics, and the two states made little headway. The discovery of the diamond fields in 1870 formed the subject of a new contention, settled by the ultimate payment of £90,000 to the Free State Government, through the President, Sir J. Brand. Native troubles still went on until in 1877 the annexation of the Transvaal was proclaimed by Shepstone. Following these matters is a description of the deputations to England for the purpose of getting the Government to reverse the annexation, the failure of the delegates, and the subsequent revolt of the Boers, together with an account of the engagements and negotiations terminating in the retrocession of the Transvaal under British suzerainty. It is stated that "British prestige had received a rude shock, and the Burghers no longer feared England's power." (The preceding notes are taken from an English synopsis of this work prepared for the purposes of this catalogue by Mr. Arend Brink of Kimberley.)

A certain number of officers and men were selected from the colonial regiments who had taken part in the South African War, and invited by the British Government to visit England and witness the coronation of King Edward VII. After being suitably entertained, before leaving for their homes, they asked for an opportunity to be present at the service at Westminster Abbey, and permission was granted by the Dean and Chapter. In the course of his address the Bishop remarked, "Never before, I suppose since the Abbey was, has such a congregation as this assembled for Divine Worship in this place amidst the trappings and adornments of a coronation." He reminded the colonials that they possessed two homes, "the old country" and their "own country," and that they would be able to tell their friends when they arrived home what warfare is. "Far away on the South African veld are graves that hold, and will ever hold, a place in your heart of hearts. . . . You have seen war and you have seen peace. To-day when the gallant generals of the Boer army are welcomed with a generous admiration to England, you and I cannot forget the blessings of peace. . . . The mother country and her colonies have been knit together by the bonds of war and of peace."

GENERAL INDEX.

This list of African plants is confined to the flora, &c., of South-Western Africa, mainly from the Portuguese Territories in that part of the subcontinent. Dr. Welwitsch, who was born in Austria in the year 1806, had been sent to the West Coast by the Portuguese Government in 1851 and remained there seven years, obtaining scientific information on the products of the country, and forwarding its material interests. On his return he received permission "to go to England and other northern countries to finish several studies necessary for the publication of the results of his exploration in Angola." He never returned to Portugal, although strong representations were made to him to do so, and by his will directed that "the study set" of certain plants should be offered to the British Museum for purchase. The Portuguese Government, however, claimed all "the several cases of botanical specimens which were in the possession of Dr. Welwitsch at the time of his death." Legal proceedings followed, but finally a compromise was effected, by which the Portuguese Government gave the British Museum the best set next after the study set, together with "a copy of the notes and descriptions made by Welwitsch explanatory of in reference thereto." The separation and transcription was entrusted to Mr. Hiern, who catalogued the Dicotyledons, and the remainder of the catalogue was completed by various naturalists and the staff of the Department of Botany of the British Museum.

In the Introduction, Advocate Wessels states that "the Afrikaners in South Africa may be roughly divided into three political classes:—

- "1. The Afrikaners descended from English ancestors. These have a strong attachment to the Empire, and no desire to break away from it.
- "2. Afrikaners descended from Dutch or Huguenot ancestors, who, like the English Afrikaners, are anxious that South Africa should form part of the Empire. These may be shortly designated as loyal Dutch Afrikaners.
- "3. Afrikaners springing from Dutch and Huguenot forefathers, who are anxious to establish a United South Africa entirely free from British Rule. . . .

" . . . I think that the combination of the English Afrikaner and the loyal Dutch Afrikaner considerably exceeds the disloyal portion." Mr. Wessels remarked, "I am an Afrikaner, and I am proud of it," but "there is, however, one bad quality which has become very prevalent amongst us Afrikaners, and that is the quality of conceit. It is especially noticeable in the rising generation of Afrikaners. . . . To suggest to the young Afrikaner that he was not omniscient and omnipotent was to be a traitor to one's race. . . . It was not only the Boer of the back country that thought the Afrikaner invincible . . . there was a feeling rampant in young Transvaal that they would sweep the British into the sea . . . they were misled by Kruger and that arch-fiend Leyds." The speaker asserted that in his opinion the Republics must be annexed, and asked the ladies who composed his audience to teach their children "to loathe and despise those who sow the seeds of sedition, those who fan the flames of race hatred, and who, to satisfy their envy and vindictiveness, their hatred and ambition, would wish to make this fair country a veritable hell on earth."

The volume gives an account of the early days of the Transvaal, and the character of the Boers, with sketches of Kruger, Joubert, and Steyn, notes on the Zulus and the Basutos, a description of the Orange Free State, and the Diamond Fields, &c. &c. The writer expresses his sympathies with the Boers and asserts that many hundreds of Germans were assisting them in the war, and that the German people soon found out who had right on their side.

It is observed that "the climatic conditions prevailing in South Africa, the uncertainty and insufficiency as well as the inequality in distribution of the annual rainfall, make it absolutely necessary that irrigation should be resorted to if the country is ever to be made a self-supporting one so far as the production of foodstuffs is concerned." The writer gives particulars of the legislation with regard to irrigation already passed in the Cape Colony, and asserts that the failure so far of irrigation enterprise in the country has been due to "want of experience," "want of capital," "ignorance of the best methods of storing water," combined with "absence of public spirit and disregard of the value and the advantages of co-operation among the persons interested."

In summing up an exposition of the subjects of dispute between the British and Transvaal Governments, Mr. Westlake observes "that neither the different claims that the convention has been broken by the Transvaal Government, nor the claims to redress for grievances to individuals, have been such as could be made a cause for war." He pointed out that by the 1881 convention, "The Transvaal was to have distinct foreign relations . . . only those foreign relations were to be conducted by the Queen's Government . . . the suzerainty was mentioned in express terms in the preamble of the convention. But it was not to be an indefinite suzerainty." By the 1884 convention the Transvaal had the right "to conduct its own foreign relations subject to the Queen's approval." Allusion is made to "important matters which arise out of the general policy of the Transvaal state since it was established on its present footing by the convention of 1884," and Mr. Westlake remarked, "It does seem to me that there is very great reason for contending that it has systematically acted in such a manner as to constitute a grave danger, which entitled this country to throw the letter of the convention aside and to demand relief from a situation which had become intolerable."

English and Boer Republics. Study of the International Law. By J. Westlake, Professor of International Law at the University of Cambridge.

In the survey of the causes of the war, Mr. Westlake remarks upon the moderation of the High Commissioner (Sir Alfred, afterwards Lord Milner) when negotiating with President Kruger, and to the attitude of the Boer leader. He considered that the Ultimatum was insolent and defiant, and could have been met with only one answer. In his opinion Great Britain had no right to abandon a country which she had administered for over a century with humanity and equality, simply because some certain people chose to approve of the Afrikanders and the Republics.

London: Henry J. Drane. . . . vii+580 pp. 12mo. (1902.)

Parts of the contents of this volume appeared from time to time in the Hove Gazette, The Shoreham and Southwick District Gazette, and The Worthing Times, and these accounts were rewritten and augmented from details obtained from English, Colonial, and Dutch sources in order to complete the work. Rundle's 8th Division was mainly engaged in the Orange Free State, being occupied with the movements which led up to the surrender of Prinsloo in the Caledon Valley; the writer, however, states that he has found it impossible to confine his work strictly to an account of the division with which he served. The main aim of Mr. Wetton has been to give "an interesting account of . . . experiences of the hospital work, the hardships, privations, and life in camp and on "trek," and he observes, "It has long been my earnest wish to see destroyed those old fallacies which, I fear, are even now too readily believed, that our army is full of 'objectionable characters.' . . . If the perusal of these pages tends to remove this unjust stigma . . . I shall feel that my labour has not been in vain."

The second portion of the work is an answer to Brown's article entitled, "A Comparative View of Life and Happiness in the East and in Europe," and is written in a satiric vein, the arguments being that the Hottentots having few cares and doing little work are happier than Europeans. Mr. Wharton appears to mix up the Hottentots and the Kaffirs, and the little he knew about the native races would appear to have been culled from the pages of Kolben.

It is asserted that the petition sent to Queen Victoria by 21,000 of her subjects brought "the grievances of British settlers in the Transvaal once more into the arena of practical policy." It is contended that it was "an original, voluntary, and spontaneous demand on the part of middle and working-class Uitlanders . . . not instigated by the millionaires of Park Lane or Johannesburg. . . . None of the old Reform leaders have had aught to do with it. Above all, Mr. Rhodes and his entourage have abstained from intervening in the affair. . . . The Uitlanders live and move with a stinging sense of humiliating inferiority as compared with the Dutch. . . . They are asking no privileges that are not theirs by right, in some cases by treaty. . . . They ask that Great Britain shall protect her subjects in the Transvaal from a system of high-handed oppression which has grown more severe with the lapse of years and has now become intolerable."

It is observed that "Although the system of chartered government is at the best a compromise, nevertheless it is the only possible substitute for responsible government in the unsettled and remote regions of Africa." It is argued that "A chartered company may advance into regions where a responsible European Power may not imperil its dignity or the safety of its flag, for fear of a repulse. . . . Hence the institution of chartered companies, which act as the unofficial agencies of the European Governments." It is maintained that, "So long as a chartered company faithfully carries out and observes the obligations of its charter, it should be allowed entire freedom of action," but it is pointed out that "Great Britain is a sleeping partner in all the concerns of the chartered companies," and "It is well that she should sleep with one eye open."

The writer reproaches Mr. Gladstone for using expressions "which led people to believe that the Transvaal could not be given back, and so confirmed the pledges of the previous Government," and he remarks, "We claim, sir, at least as much justice as the Boers . . . and we implore you . . . not to allow the close of an illustrious career to be sullied by the wanton abandonment of the loyal defenders of the national honour, and an entire disregard for obligations which you yourself have acknowledged to be binding."

Embellished with plates. . . . London: Printed for John Stockdale, Piccadilly. 70 pp. Quarto. 1800.

Captain White sailed from Madras on February 26, 1798, and after a stormy voyage arrived at Delagoa Bay on June 24th. The ship was in a most disastrous condition and had to be abandoned, and while waiting to get a passage in another vessel the author made several visits to the shore. He gives an account of the "Masumo or English River," with some interesting information respecting the natives of the country. White does not mention anything about the Portuguese, and evidently he believed that the possession of the Cape included Delagoa Bay and the surrounding territory, and he remarked, "If, on the peace with the French and Dutch, we retain the Cape, which I hope to God we will, no place in my opinion can be so well calculated to form a settlement." The author succeeded in obtaining a passage to the Cape, leaving on July 18th, and he arrived in Table Bay on August 22nd.

Amongst the towns visited were Cape Town, Johannesburg, Pretoria, Durban, East London, and Port Elizabeth, and the Commissioner made careful inquiries in these trading centres with regard to the trade in cotton, woollen, and felt goods in South Africa. Referring to the class of articles shipped to the Cape, the author remarks that "The better and best goods are all British, but in lower and lowest grades we are beaten, and the foreigner, be he German or Belgian, holds the entire market." Mr. Whitham refers to the unwillingness of the British manufacturers to produce an inferior but lower-priced article, and to the fact that the low-priced article is required, and produced and sold in vast quantities by the foreigners, and he remarks, "It is useless to attempt to sell an article, albeit well worth the money, for three shillings to a native, who has only two shillings and sixpence to spend. This, I am told, our manufacturers are slow to grasp." The scope of the work extends to the trade in felt hats and caps, carpets, and hosiery and underwear, and a chapter is devoted to "Wool-growing in South Africa." The writer censures the Boer farmers for the carelessness displayed with regard to their sheep, and complains that they are sheared "before the wool has grown anything near its natural length," while the crop is badly washed and no care is taken to sort it up into different qualities.

The author was appointed by Bishop Webb of Bloemfontein to establish a mission in the district of Leribe, being practically the first station opened in Basutoland by the Church of England. Having overcome the preliminary difficulties, the undertaking seems to have prospered up to the time of the war in 1880, which was brought about by the Disarmament Act, passed by the Cape Colony. Vivid pictures of the campaign are drawn, including the last great battle between Joel and Jonathan. The book includes a good history of Basutoland from the reign of Moshesh (for whose abilities the writer had great admiration), and the character and habits of the people are fully described.

"The letters composing this memoir are published with a view to giving an idea of the kind of life which a lady is called upon to live when she leaves her English home for the purpose of aiding . . . missionary work "in such a wild and savage country as Zululand." Mrs. Wilkinson accompanied her husband, together with his missionary party, to Zululand, sailing from Falmouth on July 6, 1870. They made some stay at Bishops-court near Cape Town, afterwards proceeding to Maritzburg, Natal, and it is stated that on their arrival at this town they found that "everybody that can go is gone to the diamond fields." The road to their destination—the mission station of Kwamagwaza—was by the lower Tugela Drift to Ekowe (Etoywe), and en route the missionaries visited many well-known people in Natal, connected with mission and religious work in the colony. The volume affords considerable information respecting social and political life among the colonists and natives of Natal and Zululand at this period, and includes a few details regarding the author's travelling experiences in the Transvaal. Mrs. Wilkinson appears to have been much liked by the natives, but she does not speak well of Cetywayo, and observes, "From the day of his coronation . . . to the day our troops entered his country, his attitude towards us was one of broken faith, marked disrespect, and increasing insolence." Bishop Wilkinson and his wife visited England in 1875 in order to make arrangements for the extension of the diocese and raise the necessary funds, but towards the end of the year 1877 Mrs. Wilkinson was attacked by consumption and succumbed. The station at Kwamagwaza had become a most important centre in the very middle of Zululand and its progress had been remarkable under Bishop Wilkinson, but during the war with Cetuywayo it was destroyed and all the buildings demolished. . . .

The problem of British policy in South Africa is, according to the writer, "the management of a specific portion of the Empire" in such a manner that the preservation of its unity does not interfere with "British Democracy." It is asserted that "The mistakes of the past have almost without exception been due to the attempt to regulate the affairs of one or another South African community according to the theories maintained at the time by one of the political parties in Great Britain, to the neglect of the wishes and feelings of the people primarily concerned, and in contempt of the judgment of the statesmen on the spot. . . ."

The writer was sent to South Africa to report officially on the possibilities of irrigation in the Cape Colony, the Orange River Colony, and the Transvaal. He suggests that all rivers and torrents be proclaimed as public domains and that the State should aid irrigation, and part of the profits from the mines should also be used for this purpose.

The writer was put in prison for three days by an Assistant Commandant during the South African War, and it is interesting to learn that his offence consisted of "telling the officer that he did not know English grammar." Contrary to the views of many war critics, Mr. Willcocks contends that the frontal attacks which proved so disastrous during the war "were tactical successes of the first order." The pamphlet bristles with inaccuracies and bad spelling.

*WILLIAMS, BASIL : On Some Boer Characteristics and the Burning of Farms. Ex. "The Monthly Review," No. 4, pp. 118-130. Roy. 8vo. 1901.

According to this article, it is maintained that "in England there is still (1901) a section of the British public . . . who believe that the Boers can hardly be reckoned in the category of civilised enemies." The writer asserts that he was constantly in the company of the combatants of both races, and his evidence is distinctly favourable to the Republicans as soldiers and men. He states that he by no means thought them cowards, "but their method of fighting was peculiar to us"; in his opinion, "their piety was genuine; they bore us no malice, but regarded us as honourable foes; a feeling we reciprocated." With regard to the farm burnings, it is remarked that some punishment was absolutely necessary in cases of treachery, but those people who compare the acts of the Germans in France to our proceedings in the Transvaal and Orange Free State forget that the Germans did not intend to remain in France. It is maintained that the policy of endeavouring to stamp out guerilla warfare . . . "is far more hopeful than any amount of farm-burning."

The speaker discussed the principle as applied to South Africa, and asserted that the conclusion he had arrived at was "that the betterment charge on people who profit from an undertaking more directly than the rest of the community is theoretically perfect. If it can be levied fairly, no conceivable objection could be brought against it, but the actual difficulties in the way of it seem to me so great that I regard this method as impracticable." With regard to recoupment "as a working proposition . . . it seems certainly not to be unfair on the individual. Moreover, in South Africa, where the property market is less conservative than in England . . . the result would not be so disappointing to public bodies as it appears very often to have been in England."

Most of the earlier works on South Africa, and those written up to the middle of the nineteenth century, are laid under contribution for the purposes of this volume, which claims to afford information regarding the tribes, plants, and animals of the country, "interspersed with true stories of chivalrous enterprise and heart-thrilling adventure."

- *WILLIAMS, CHARLES: Hushed up: A Case for Inquiry into some suppressed Facts concerning the Conduct of the War in South Africa. By Charles Williams. . . . Grant Richards. . . . (London.) 106 pp. 12mo. 1902.

The author endeavours to prove that the British Government devised means to render the inquiry into the conduct of the South African War "limited, cramped," and "abortive." It is stated that in the belief that the Boers would not dare to take the initiative, the Government had thrown away every chance, although their own Intelligence Office had warned them that the Transvaal and Orange Free State had armed themselves with modern weapons, and were drilling as they had never drilled before. When the writer pointed out that France and Germany had armed themselves with the same quick-firing guns adopted by the Boers, he was menaced under the "official secrets Act," and threatened that he would not be licensed again as a war correspondent. The work is characterised by severe attacks on Lords Roberts and Kitchener, and Buller, it is remarked, was sent out to Africa, "a General without an army." Stress is laid on Lord Roberts' vacillation, and it is asserted that after the "malfeasant" attack on Cronje, the British Commander-in-Chief contemplated a retirement on Modder River Station, and that this plan was only abandoned in consequence of commissariat difficulties. Both Lords Kitchener and Roberts are taken severely to task for their orders in connection with the burning of the Boer farmhouses, and the latter is styled "the modern Attila," while as to the former it is observed that "a blacker stain rests on no British soldier for his destruction of De Wet's property." The one point for which Lord Kitchener is commended is his attempt to bring about peace with Botha, and in reference to this it is said that he "once more, as at Fashoda, proved himself more of a statesman than a soldier."

The author of this historical and practical account of the diamond industry, and especially of the South African diamond mines, was for many years the general manager of the De Beers Consolidated Mines, a gigantic undertaking founded by the late Cecil John Rhodes. The volume contains a full description of the mines with the fullest details respecting their working. Mr. Gardner Williams initiated the present system of work pursued in all underground diamond mines, and the work is replete with valuable information, and is the standard authority on all matters connected with diamonds and diamond-mining. In addition to this, the work contains an account of the celebrated diamonds discovered in by-gone times, a description of the discovery of the Kimberley group of mines and the rise of the surrounding townships, chapters on the formation of the diamond, the methods of cutting and polishing the jewels, a description of the early and modern diamond-mining machinery, and an Appendix containing an account of Kimberley during the South African War. The volume is elaborately illustrated, and many of the engravings reproduce ancient maps and charts and photographs of the greatest interest and rarity in connection with the diamond fields.

A short account of political matters in Bechuanaland from the appointment of the Rev. John Mackenzie as Her Majesty's Deputy Commissioner, to the military occupation under Sir Charles Warren. The writer evidently took the side of Sir Hercules Robinson, Cecil J. Rhodes, and the Colonial Party in the disputes, intrigues, and negotiations which took place at this period, and to a certain extent condones the conduct of Van Niekerk, Adrian De La Rey, and others concerned in the death of Mr. Honey.

A clear and concise account of the march of the expeditionary force and the commencement of the settlements. Sir John remarks that "the effects of the Government policy in granting the Charter have been twofold:—

"1. To secure 'Fairest Africa' to England: for had it not been for the prompt action of Mr. Rhodes, these lands would have been annexed by the Boers, the Portuguese, or the Germans.

"2. To bring the blessings of hope, peace, and security to the natives. . . ."

The author dissents from the views and theories of Messrs. Bent and Swan (as published in the "Ruins of Mashonaland") in many respects. He traverses the statement that the country in the vicinity of Zimbabwe is a "wilderness," remarking that Mr. Bent visited the ruins during the months of July and August, the worst time of the year, while in November, when Sir John pursued his investigations, "everything was at its brightest and freshest best," and all kinds of vegetables and produce were available from the districts. He also disagrees with Mr. Swan's figures with reference to the altitude of Victoria, i.e., 3200 feet, stating that the correct elevation is 3600 feet. He regrets that Mr. Bent was only able to devote two months to his survey of the ruins, but does not endorse his opinion to the effect that the inhabitants of Zimbabwe obtained their gold from "the recently discovered gold belts of Victoria," maintaining that there are no traces of old workings throughout that area. The author was successful in discovering a large number of relics during the five weeks he was engaged in excavating the ruins, and he gives a detailed list of his finds.

Sir John Willoughby remarked, in a letter to the editor of the magazine, "I am most anxious, for the sake of myself and all concerned, to place on record in the most public manner the true story of our expedition, so that the public and posterity may be able to judge between it and the numerous silly misstatements promulgated by individuals who were not actually there." It is stated that it was not thought desirable to publish it pending the trial of the officers and the proceedings of the select committee; but the report was written in Pretoria prison within three days of the surrender of the force, while the events were still fresh in the mind of the author, and it is confined to a mere statement of what is represented to be actual fact, without any reference to political or imperial matters. It is asserted that before the troops started, Dr. Jameson read to them the letter of invitation received from Johannesburg, and explained that no hostilities were intended. Fighting was only to be resorted to in self-defence, and neither the persons or property of inhabitants of the Transvaal were to be molested, as the sole object of the enterprise was "to help our fellow men in their extremity, and to ensure their obtaining full attention to their just demands."

The work, with regard to the letterpress as well as the illustrations, is confined to that part of Bechuanaland which at the commencement of the twentieth century was ruled over by Khama. A good deal of information is afforded respecting the growth of religion and education amongst the natives, with some particulars regarding the life of the white inhabitants of the protectorate. There are views of the deserted capital Shoshong, the town of Palapye, the residences of Khama, Sekgome, Bathoen, &c., together with portrait of the chiefs and of their families, and many other illustrations, mainly depicting the social life of the natives in Bechuanaland.

South Africa : The Argus Company, Ltd., Cape Town, Johannesburg, Pretoria, Salisbury, and Buluwayo. xii + 335 pp. Sm. Quarto. 1894.

Although nominally a history of the Matabele War, the book is practically an account of that part of Africa now known as Rhodesia, from the times of Moselekatse to the death of Lobengula. The volume takes the form of individual chapters by a number of contributors and the two authors and compilers, many of the writers being men who took part in the exploration and settlement of the country, and in the final struggle with the last king of Matabeleland. There is a description of the occupation of Buluwayo, the flight of the king with the remnant of his army, an account of the loss of the Wilson Patrol, and other interesting matter connected with the annexation and settlement of Matabeleland.

There is a good deal of information regarding the history of Rhodesia since the British occupation of the country, together with a description of Bulawayo, and the gold-mining and commercial companies. The volume contains a number of portraits of prominent men connected with the colony, and there are lists of directors, officials, and other public men.

A narrative of "the salient features and the principal events of the Zulu War. The work embraces an early history of the Zulu nation and of Natal, including a chapter dealing with native policy in the latter colony, and the laws, customs, and religion of the Zulus." The author contends that, without taking these matters into consideration, "it will be perfectly impossible to appreciate the policy of Sir Bartle Frere, or to understand the real causes of the war, or of many events in its progress. Mr. Wilmot appears to have been fully convinced that the war in Zululand was inevitable, and he asserts that "Cetywayo, for two years, had been arranging for a great special blow on the white people. He was couching ready to spring and the High Commissioner knew it was absolutely necessary to act at once." With reference to the attack on Sir Bartle Frere's policy, it is observed, "Slowly, but more certainly, will the mists of prejudice be lifted from the minds of the English people, and they will learn to know that the policy they so much vilified saved the British name from dishonour, and the British people and British interests in South Africa from destruction."

It is stated that "this collection of verse has been gathered from various sources in the Cape Colony, Natal, and the Transvaal." The selections are confined to the English language, but in the Preface, which is signed "B.," it is observed that "it could be wished that certain well-known productions in the "Boerentaal" could have been preserved in these pages. It is contended that "it is a mistake to look upon South African history as full of the details of colonial life which are only interesting to colonists. The contrary is the case. . . . The history of South Africa is full of adventure and romance. Something new of great interest has been constantly discovered, until this portion of the world stands before us as a land of diamonds and of gold, where the oldest auriferous workings of the world have become the newest "diggings." The volume deals with the gradual growth of South African Colonisation from the days of the discovery of the continent by the Portuguese to the period of the Matabele War and the death of Lobengula, and incidentally, the history of the whole of the sub-continent is sketched together with interesting notes upon the natives, and their customs, manners, and characteristics.

It is stated that the British South Africa Company, Cecil Rhodes, and the author, shared in the expense of making an exhaustive search amongst the ancient manuscripts, maps, and documents throughout the archives and libraries of Europe, with the object of discovering "all possible traces of the history of the wonderful country of Monomotapa, the Ophir of King Solomon, and the land which is marked 'rich in gold,' in maps of the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries." Mr. Wilmot was commissioned to undertake the quest, and he made a careful investigation of "the treasures of the Vatican and the Archives of the Propaganda," and obtained valuable information from documents preserved in Lisbon, and by the "Society of Jesus." The present volume is the result of his labours, and the scope of the work extends to the year 1830, "when the last Dominican monk left Monomotapa. . . . The volume contains some illustrations of Phœnician remains, and a copy of a fine map in the Vatican library. In this map, first published in 1623, Monomotapa is well filled up, probably from details supplied by the Roman Missionary. There are also some interesting appendices, containing extracts from Papal documents on South Africa, and a list of authorities preserved in the Vatican."

J. C. Juta & Co. . . . London, Cape Town, Port Elizabeth, Johannesburg, Stellenbosch. 3 Vols. 8vo. 1897-9.

It is stated in the first volume that "the edifice of freedom in the Cape Colony was crowned by responsible government in 1872, and in that year we commenced the 'History of Our Own Times in South Africa.'" It is asserted that "an Afrikaner nation has arisen which looks with suspicion on many acts of the British Government, and is assiduously wooed by powerful Dutch Republican parties." In the second volume an endeavour is made "to trace the results flowing from the fall of Sir Bartle Frere and the reversal of his policy," and the history of the Boer War of Independence (1880-81) is related, together with chapters on the Basuto War and the Warren Expedition to Bechuanaland.

The last volume contains an account of the state of affairs in the Cape Colony and the Republics during the period reviewed, with full particulars of the Jameson Raid and its consequences, the Conquest of Rhodesia, and the political situation throughout South Africa one year before the commencement of the South African War, 1899-1902.

Mr. Wilmot asserts that "the origin of the Africander party is traceable principally to discontent with British rule," and the manner in which successive administrations shirked their South African responsibilities and committed "the most glaring inconsistencies." He draws an analogy between the methods of Daniel O'Connell, the leader of the Irish National Party, and J. H. Hofmeyr, the "Ons Jan" of Africanderism, both of whom, he maintains, "ostensibly were in favour of working only on constitutional lines," and both of whom "were defeated by extremists, who saw no other way of obtaining success than by recourse to arms."

From 1820 to 1868, by the Hon. John Centlivres Chase, M.L.C. Cape Town : J. C. Juta. . . . xvii + 530 pp. (Appendix). 8vo. 1869.

The first regular and consecutive history of the Cape Colony. The greater part of the first section of the work was published in the first volume of The South African Magazine, 1867, in which twelve chapters appeared, bringing the history of the Colony up to the year 1854. Later on, Mr. Wilmot altered the scope of his work, by eliminating everything subsequent to the year 1819, and amending and revising the remainder. Theal remarks ("History of South Africa," 1834-1854), "Mr. Wilmot made all the use that was possible of printed matter upon the colony before 1820, but he had not access to the manuscript archives. . . . As a pioneer work, this book must be spoken of with respect, and assuredly no small amount of time and labour was bestowed upon the preparation of the first portion of it. It is now out of print, and it is rarely met with."

The latter part of the volume was written by the author of "The Cape of Good Hope and the Eastern Province of Algoa Bay" (1843), one of the 1820 settlers, who, according to Theal, was more of a politician than a historian, and was influenced by a great desire that the Cape Colony should be divided into an Eastern and a Western District. The book, which for a considerable period was the only standard publication respecting the history of the Cape Colony, has some curious and valuable notes, and is much used as a work of reference.

He gives some account of his presence on the occasion of "an outbreak of the Boers in the Orange River, when going the Circuit with Judge Menzies," and there are several interesting references to events in South Africa at this period.

Mr. Wilson was practically the first Gold Commissioner in the Transvaal. He threw open the township of Barberton in February 1884, and was, he states, for seventeen years in close relationship with inner Pretoria, and consequently in a position to gain a fair insight into the methods of the officials of the country. He states that soon after his appointment he visited Pretoria to induce the Government to formally proclaim the gold-fields, and after much negotiation succeeded, the President imploring him to collect as much as possible in license money as there was only half-a-crown in the Treasury. Within a month of this period, he sent the large sum of £9000 to the Government, and a regular income of £10,000 a month was soon afterwards assured. As an example of the meanness of the Government, he asserts that despite this magnificent income from the gold-fields, when he asked for an allowance for the building of suitable offices, he was told that all the State could spare was £200. He was of opinion that the action of the Transvaal authorities towards the gold-field has always been mere "passivity, or actual opposition," and that whenever anything has been done for the mining interest, it was with the ulterior object of benefiting either some relation of the President, or some member of the Inner Ring at Pretoria. The author asserts that there was a gang of "plotters and plunderers" without whose consent or assistance no legislation or concession could be carried through; their names being Eloff, Schutte, Grobler, Potgieter, and Gillingham. Full and circumstantial details are given of acts of blackmailing on the part of this clique and others, and the tale of the sordid and grasping corruption that appears (according to this narrative) to have permeated, almost without exception, the whole of the Government officials of the Republic must have been startling to the Apologists of the Boer Regime.

In the course of the introductory remarks the writer observes, "The present crisis is not the event of a day ; it is the direct and often-foretold outcome of the condition of affairs in South Africa, which has long been almost intolerable, and has now ended in becoming impossible. Its history is that of a contention between a free monarchy, which is virtually a republic, on the one hand, and a republic in name, which is, in simple fact, a rigorous oligarchy—all but an absolute despotism—on the other." Mr. Wilson asserts that the duty of the Government is intervention : "Once before when the Transvaal had shown itself a danger to South Africa, we did not hesitate to interfere ; and we were right. But now the case for intervention is threefold more powerful than then."

The view adopted by the writer was, that while statesmen holding the opinions of Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman were leading members of the Liberal party, it would not be safe to leave the settlement of South Africa in their hands. Federation was the goal to be attained, but to rule a United South Africa with success, firmness and consistency were necessary. It was absurd to believe that half the Cape Colony was represented by the Afrikaner Bond, and "that the opinion of the inhabitants of the Cape Colony is averse to the complete absorption of the Transvaal and the Orange Free State."

*WINSLOE, Colonel R. W. C.: The Siege of Potchefstroom. (Transvaal War, 1880-1881.) Ex. "Macmillan's Magazine," No. 282, pp. 443-463. By Colonel R. W. C. Winsloe, Royal Scots Fusiliers. 8vo. April 1883.

Early in December 1880 the author, who had been stationed at Pretoria, was appointed to proceed to Potchefstroom to relieve the military officer in command at that place. It was known that there had been some dispute about taxes with the Boers, but there was certainly no prevalent idea that war was imminent. On his arrival the author found that the strength of the garrison totalled 213, with two nine-pounders and another gun, and measures had already been taken to start the building of a fort and to sink a well. Matters soon assumed a serious aspect, and a few days later the whole of the troops, accompanied by forty-eight civilians, were sent to the fort, the gaol, and the Landrost's office, the two latter having been specially fortified. Next day hostilities commenced in earnest; the Boers occupied the town, and a brisk action took place round the Landrost's office, Cronje (later on of Paardeberg fame) being in command of the Burghers. After some preliminary failures the besieged struck good water in a well at 15 feet depth, but many hardships were endured, especially by the immured ladies, one of whom soon succumbed from typhoid. On January 18th the garrison at the Landrost's office surrendered, and the troops at the gaol were removed to the fort. The Boers did not attempt to storm the position, but by the middle of March the British found it untenable; little food was left, and that was damaged; the sick were dying for nourishment, so on the 18th the Colonel thought it best to make terms for the evacuation of the fort. He appears to have obtained favourable conditions, and his troops were allowed to march out, retaining a gun and its ammunition, which were handed to the authorities at "Cronstadt," to be returned to the British Government at the close of the war. Cronje and his men treated the British officers with courtesy and kindness, and invited them to many breakfasts, dinners, and luncheons; and otherwise entertained them. The Boer General, however, concealed the fact of the agreement between Sir Evelyn Wood and Piet Joubert, a knowledge of which would have rendered it unnecessary to surrender the fort, and in consequence the British troops reoccupied the town for a short time at a later date. In all other respects the Boers behaved with good feeling and hospitality to their opponents, and the writer describes them as "rough, hearty, determined-looking men, of a class to command respect." The casualties of the British during the siege were 31 deaths and 54 wounded; it is estimated that the Boer losses "fell little short of 250," although they would only "confess to one or two killed, and some 20 wounded."

The writer strongly deprecates the existence of the Ukulabola System in Natal, and the acquiescence of the Colonial and Imperial authorities in the retention of the Custom, which is termed as "too abominable for description." He refers to the first annexation of the Transvaal, remarking, "This ruthless act may now be regarded as complete." Mr. Wirgman observes that "the Kaffir had learnt, during the days of Dutch rule, to hate and despise a white face; and that the restrictions which bound the English farmers with regard to recovery of stolen stock, lowered them in the eyes of the natives, and, by thus bringing our people into contempt, indirectly caused the first Kaffir War."

The writer asks, "Could any South African colonist, who confined his education solely to the 'Hottentot Dutch' in ordinary use, ever aspire to literary fame or social distinction, or qualify for any of the learned professions? My one wish for the rest of my fellow colonists, who, like myself, are not English in race, is that they should adopt as their chief medium of communication the English tongue."

The author remarks, "The fact that the great majority of the European inhabitants" of South Africa "are of Dutch and French Huguenot descent, makes the position of our Church quite different to that which it occupies in Australia and New Zealand." The first part of the work contains an interesting historical account of South Africa up to the year 1847, when Robert Gray was consecrated as first Bishop of the province, while the latter chapters deal with the history of the Church in the sub-continent up to the date of publication.

The story of the 1820 settlers is related correctly and concisely, together with a short sketch of the subsequent history of South Africa up to date. Dr. Wirgman was of opinion that "It is time for the Imperial Government to remember the claims of the descendants of the settlers of 1820, and of the older British population generally," the claims of the Dutch and the new-comers having been all that have been considered of late. It is noted that as long back as 1850 Dr. Robert Gray, first Bishop of Cape Town, mentioned the "fears of the few English in the Graaff-Reinet district lest the Cape Parliament should prove a means of placing the British population under the heel of the Boer. . . . They knew that sooner or later the Cape Dutch would dominate the Cabinet office." It is asserted that "The Boers have been fighting all along for an independence which would expel the British Empire from South Africa." The author considers that the Cape Colony should be split up into two divisions, which, with the Transvaal, Natal, Orange River Colony, and Rhodesia, should form the six states of the South African Federation.

In the preparatory note, by the British South Africa Company, it is stated that "By the completion of the Trunk Railway System of Southern Rhodesia, and the establishment of through communication between the Port of Beira on the Indian Ocean, the Cape Ports and the Victoria Falls, South African and external markets have now been opened to local produce." Special note is taken of the results of the investigation into the agricultural prospects of the country, and the possibilities of supplying many of the commodities now imported into South Africa, with special reference to food-stuffs. Mr. Wise was engaged to report on the land and farming of Rhodesia, and the possibilities of land settlement, and he states that he saw no reason why it should not be successful provided that the land was not burdened with any costly scheme. He recommends that the areas be allotted in alternate blocks, the company reserving adjoining blocks to those given out.

It is stated that the account has been compiled from a careful study of the exchanges of the "Journal of United States Artillery," and from a perusal of various works on the South African War. Captain Wisser observes that "the best current accounts of the war were undoubtedly those of the German and French military periodicals, especially those of the Militär Wochenblatt and the Revue du Cercle Militaire, but the prejudice against the English in nearly all of our exchanges (other than British) was so evident that the author had difficulty in arriving at a fair and unprejudiced view, and in presenting an unbiassed account of the events—his particular aim in writing this history."

A short sketch of South African history from the first days of the Dutch settlement at the Cape to the restoration of the independence of the Transvaal in 1881. The writer asserts that "want of sympathy with the Dutchmen has been the bane of Imperial policy from the beginning. We have never attempted to consult their interests or conciliate their affection. In the early days of our occupation of the Cape we ruled them despotically, under the influence of the reaction against liberal principles caused by the excesses of the French Revolution. When the pendulum swung it carried English opinion in the direction, not of an enlightened policy towards the Dutch, but of impossible idealistic treatment of the natives, and consequently of antagonism towards Dutchmen, whose experience had taught them that the natives were not improved or elevated by being given liberty to live in barbarism."

He has established the paramountcy of this country in South Africa on a firmer basis than it has ever occupied before." It is urged that "the fundamental contention of the Transvaal in all its disputes with the paramount power is that it is an independent State," but it is pointed out that Article IV. of the London Convention not only restricted European treaties but also treaties with native tribes, and that "this restriction was not a mere caprice of Imperialism. It had a definite and practical aim . . . to prevent the Transvaal from doing anything in conflict with the interests of Great Britain or any of Her Majesty's possessions in South Africa," but "from the very moment that the London Convention was signed, President Kruger set on foot a campaign against British interests, having in view the abrogation of his dependent status."

(WOLTEMAADE, WOLRAAD): "De Held Woltemade." View of a Shipwreck at the Cape. Square Folio; "Printed description" of plate. Amsterdam. 6 pp. 8vo. 1775.

An engraving, accompanied by a printed account of the heroism displayed by Wolraad Woltemaade, a dairyman, on the occasion of the wreck of the East India merchantman Jonge Thomas, in Table Bay, on the 1st of June 1773. "Woltemaade, who was mounted on a powerful horse, dashed into the breakers, and reached the ship's side. With two men holding to the horse's tail, he returned to the shore, and this feat he repeated until he had saved fourteen of the crew. In the next venture he was swept under a breaker and was drowned. . . . The directors (of the Dutch East India Company) caused the exploit of the brave dairyman to be pictured on the stern of the next ship built for them, which they named the Held (or Hero) Woltemaade. (Theal's "History of South Africa, 1601-1795.")

*WOOD, Sir HENRY EVELYN: The Life of Lieutenant-General Sir Henry Evelyn Wood, V.C., G.C.B., G.C.M.G. . . . By Charles Williams. . . . London: Sampson Low, Marston & Company, Limited. . . . x + 309 pp. 8vo. (1892.)

It is mentioned in the Preface that Sir Evelyn's mother and sister had written, and privately printed, a record of his life, and the present volume, for which, however, Mr. Williams accepts full responsibility, is to some extent an amplification of the earlier work. The General started his career as a naval cadet, and was wounded in the Crimean War; he soon left the navy, however, and was gazetted as a cornet in the 13th Hussars. He afterwards accompanied Sir Garnet Wolseley to Ashanti, where he was again severely wounded. On his return to England he was raised to the rank of Brevet-Colonel and made a C.B.: somewhat curiously, a month later, he was called to the Bar. Soon after he was ordered to South Africa, where there were disturbances with the Kaffirs. The book contains a good account of the native wars in Kaffirland and Zululand, during which campaigns Sir Evelyn was highly commended by the Commander-in-Chief. He was present at the battle of Ulundi, in which the Zulus were defeated and Cetuywayo's power broken. In recognition of these services he was made a K.C.B., and was received with great honour in England, and was entertained by the Queen, Lord Beaconsfield, and the Bar of England. In a short time, however, he was back in South Africa again, this time for service in the Transvaal. There is a short account of the engagements with the Boers in the war of 1880-1881, and of the negotiations with Kruger, Brand, and Joubert. Sir Evelyn concluded an armistice with Joubert for eight days, with a view to providing food for the troops. The author is convinced that the home authorities endeavoured to throw the responsibility of the peace negotiations with the Boers on General Wood, when as a matter of fact they had definitely decided on peace, whereas Sir Evelyn was in favour of fighting within a fortnight of his despatch. He maintains that under the guise of commending the General they endeavoured to throw on him the onus of the settlement, and that while he did his best to carry out the wishes of the Government, he was discredited by many soldiers who did not think his action with regard to the negotiations a credit to the British army.

of a ten months' trip in an ox-waggon through Mashonaland and Matabeleland. By Joseph Garbett Wood, M.L.A., Col. of Colonial Forces. J. C. Juta & Co., Cape Town, Port Elizabeth, and Johannesburg. iv + 198 pp. Cr. 8vo. 1893.

The "Wood, Chapman, and Francis Syndicate" obtained a concession from King Lobengula to dig for gold, &c., "between the rivers Shashi and Macloutsi," &c. &c., the document being dated November 17, 1877. About nine months later Mr. Wood was informed by the Imperial Secretary, Cape Town, that this tract of country was in dispute, both Khama and Lobengula claiming it, and that pending arbitration no European would be allowed to enter the territory. Later on he was instructed that the Governor had directed Administrator Shippard to arrest any one who attempted to enter the disputed territory before the matter was settled. In spite of these warnings Mr. Wood persisted in entering upon the forbidden ground, and eventually was called upon by Sir Sydney Shippard to sign a contract agreeing, under a penalty of £2000, not to return to the concession, a step which, if persisted in, would probably lead to hostilities between Khama and Lobengula. On his refusal to sign this document, Major Goold Adams deported him to Mafeking, and Mr. Wood appealed to the High Commissioner, but the latter confirmed the actions of Sir Sydney Shippard and Major Goold Adams. The volume contains a most interesting narrative of the journeys through Matabeleland, Mashonaland, and Bechuanaland, including an excellent description of the natives, their customs and industries, a portrait of King Lobengula, and several maps and illustrations.

A popular account of the anthropology and ethnology of the African races compiled from accounts of different authors and travellers. There is a full description of the manners, customs, weapons, ornaments, and religions of the Kaffirs, with separate chapters on war, hunting, agriculture, social characteristics, and domestic life. There are also articles on the Hottentots, Bushmen, Korannas, Namaquas, Bechuanas, and other South African tribes. *WOOD, WALTER: The Northumberland Fusiliers. Illustrated.
London: Grant Richards. xxii + 236 pp. Cr. 8vo. (1901.)

The Northumberland Fusiliers were early in the field during the South African War (1899-1902), and soon after their arrival at the Cape were despatched to De Aar, early in October 1899. They took part in Lord Methuen's campaign and were engaged in many of the historic battles, the regiment participating in more than an average share of the disasters of the war, which reduced their effective numbers by fully 50 per cent. by the year 1900.

*WOOD, WALTER: The Rifle Brigade. . . . Illustrated. London:
Grant Richards. xx + 215 pp. 8vo. (1901)?

This celebrated Brigade came into existence in the year 1800, and was numbered the 95th Rifles at the end of the year 1802; it was sent to South Africa for the first time in 1846, where it took part in the Kaffir War and the battle of Boomplaats. The next visit to the Cape was made in 1851, where the Brigade was again employed in a Kaffir War. Nearly half a century elapsed before the Rifle Brigade was sent to South Africa for the third time, when it took part in the South African War (1899-1902) in the Natal campaign, and full particulars of the services and losses of the Brigade during these hostilities will be found in Chapters IX., X., and XI., and in the Appendix.

- *WOOD, WILLIAM: Statements respecting Dingaan, King of the Zoolahs, with some particulars relative to the Massacres of Messrs. Retief and Biggar, and their parties. By William Wood, Interpreter to Dingaan. Cape Town: Published by Collard & Co., 24 Heeregracht. 38 pp. Cr. 8vo. 1840.

This very interesting pamphlet gives a full account of the massacre of the Boers under Retief by order of Dingan, as witnessed by the writer, who had been living with the Rev. Mr. Owen outside the Zulu king's kraal. Wood distinctly states that he warned some of the farmers that he "did not think all was right, and recommended them to be on their guard"; upon which they smiled and said, "We are sure the King's heart is right with us, and there is no cause for fear." This incident is not mentioned by Theal, but is quoted by Chase in "The Natal Papers." Wood's account gives particulars of his retreat from Zululand with Mr. Owen and his party, and their subsequent arrival at Port Natal, and of the embarking of the Europeans on the Comet, upon the approach of a large body of Dingan's men. The little work gives many particulars referring to the state of the Zulus at this period, with anecdotes illustrating the cruelties perpetrated by the Zulu king, who, however, seems to have always treated Wood with especial kindness.

This pamphlet is now very scarce, and there is no copy in the British Museum, Royal Colonial Institute, or the Colonial Office Libraries.

"The Bristol Times and Mirror," July 29th to August 20th, 1909. Bound up in a quarto volume. 13 pp. Quarto. 1909.

The writer reviews the early causes of disunion between the Dutch Colonists and the British authorities, and gives particulars of the long duel between Rhodes and Kruger for political superiority in South Africa. He discusses the agitation for the Franchise in the Transvaal and the consequences of the Jameson Raid, and gives some information respecting the "reconstruction" of South Africa after the war. In referring to the British leaders Mr. Woods observes, "their success consolidated South Africa as the war saved it."

It is stated that the object of the publication "is to give, in as concise a form as possible, some account of the birds of Natal, including the newly-annexed province of Zululand. . . . There is, perhaps, no better place in the world for birds than this country. . . . There are few birds that excel some of our own in elegance and beauty of plumage." The frontispiece is a coloured engraving of the "Stactolaema Woodwardi" (published in the Ibis, 1897), which was discovered by the authors and named after them.

*WORSFOLD, W. BASIL: The English Government and the Boers.

Ex. "The Contemporary Review," No. 364, pp. 473-483. Roy. 8vo. April, 1896.

The paper discusses the right of England to interfere with the government of the Transvaal on behalf of the Uitlanders, and it is asserted that "There is a tendency in certain quarters to represent the Boers as a peace-loving and non-aggressive race, and to characterise British interferences with them as selfish and oppressive." It is pointed out that all such interferences dictated by British policy have been either for "the protection of the coloured races, or the maintenance of the interests of South Africa as a whole." There is a short account of "England's relationship to the Boers," and it is said that they had no grievances in Natal, and withdrew from there for the same real reasons as from the Cape—"the greed of land, and the desire to treat the natives as seemed good in their own eyes." Referring to the two Republics, the author contends that "the childish incapacity of these diminutive states, their selfish isolation from common interests of the Europeans, and the mingled weakness and aggressiveness which they display in dealing with the natives, compelled the British government to reluctantly abandon the policy of non-intervention upon which it had deliberately entered in 1854."

- *WORSFOLD, W. BASIL : A History of South Africa. (The Temple Printers.) . . . J. M. Dent & Co. viii + 199 pp. 16mo. 1900.

A short historical compilation, the materials for which, it is stated, were drawn from "State Papers and other official publications—Dutch, Colonial, and Imperial," and from "the writings of authors who wrote from personal knowledge of the events and subjects of which they treat, such as Pringle, Cloete, Mrs. Harriet Ward, and Mr. John MacKenzie." At the time of the publication of the volume Mr. Worsfold had resided in South Africa for about two years, during which period he had endeavoured to grasp the political state of the country and to learn something of its problems. Respecting the outbreak of the South African War he observes, "The question has been asked more than once, what is the object of the War? The History of South Africa can alone supply the answer. The Army of Great Britain and the Anglo-Saxon Empire is fighting to-day in South Africa to retrieve the mistakes of 1854, and to recover the lost solidarity of the Empire."

- *WORSFOLD, W. BASIL : The Problem of South African Unity. London : George Allen. . . . 64 pp. 16mo. 1900.

This address "was delivered on December 14, 1899, at the Imperial Institute, being the concluding lecture of a course of six, entitled 'England in South Africa.'" Mr. Worsfold observes, "A process so difficult and so delicate as the union of the European communities of South Africa under a central government can only be attempted with any promise of success when the impulse arises from the spontaneous and unanimous desire of the communities themselves." It is assumed that the principle will be adopted "that the Customs, the Railways, Native Administration, and Colonial Defence should be assigned to the Federal Authority," but it is pointed out that "there will remain the difficult and delicate task of valuing the contribution which each province has made to the common fund of South African wealth, henceforward to be thus administered in the joint interests of the Union."

- *WORSFOLD, W. BASIL : British Policy in South Africa. Ex. "The Monthly Review," No. 31, pp. 47-68. Roy. 8vo. April, 1903.

Reference is made to the fact that the Dutch have maintained a firm grip of the country districts throughout South Africa, but it is predicted that the extension of the cultivable area will enable us to establish British settlers without displacing the Dutch population. It is stated that the opinion that "if we let the Dutch alone . . . they will gradually settle down," has been proved false by past experience, and it is argued that "the grant of self-government in the Cape Colony has been perverted into an opportunity for a determined organised political propaganda in support of the Dutch nationality," whilst the paramount object of the British policy is the fusion of the Dutch and English races. With reference to Mr. Chamberlain's work, it is maintained "that his personal converse with the Boers . . . will blunt the edge of blind resentment against an impalpable and impersonal enemy which has for a century past goaded the Boer to resistance against the British Government."

The author states that during his two residences in South Africa he was "brought into personal contact with many of the principal actors in the events which are related in this book. While therefore no pains have been spared to secure accuracy by a careful study of official papers and other reliable publications," the information "is not derived by any means exclusively from these sources." Mr. Worsfold traces "the failure of British administration during the nineteenth century," from the date of the acquisition of the Cape to the Jameson Raid, setting forth its causes and detailing its results. He gives some account of what he describes as Lord Milner's "Year of Observation," and of the political state of the Cape Colony at this period, and its connection with the attitude of the Kruger administration in the Transvaal. Reference is made to the great ability, personal knowledge, and perseverance of the High Commissioner in the difficult task of making clear to the Imperial Government their duty with regard to South African affairs, and to the forethought with which, in the midst of a lengthy and devastating war, he made his preparations for the inauguration of administrative government in the new colonies as soon as circumstances would allow of it.

The author, who was adjutant to General Villebois-Mareuil, asserts that the Boers "gave up their independence to save their wives and children from destruction," and that "The whole world has sympathised with the Boers since the commencement of the South African War. The reason for this is not alone that the British greed for gold has brought about this horrible bloodshed, but that no such revolting cruelty has ever taken place to compare with that waged by the British in the extirpation of a poor race of herdsmen, . . . but although they (the Boers) did not succeed, the time is coming when the prophecy of the 'Iron Chancellor' will be proved to be true, and out of the ruins of the rotten, gold-seeking English Empire will arise 'The United States of South Africa.'"

It is stated that "the good work of our severely criticised Cavalry has not yet been publicly appreciated; and it must be remembered that the gallant Imperial Yeomen, and many other of our true Colonial Corps, to whom we owe so much, were trained and led by the Regular Cavalry Officers." The volume gives an account of the operations at Colesberg, the relief of Kimberley, and the pursuit of Cronje; and it is observed of the latter that if he had "only realised the smallness of General French's force holding him, he might have overwhelmed it." The Inniskilling Dragoons took part in the occupations of Bloemfontein, Johannesburg, and Pretoria, and penetrated to Barberton; they were present at the battle of Diamond Hill and many other engagements. It is asserted that Commandant Kriel, a German in charge of a troop of Transvaal police who surrendered at Windhoek, informed the British officers that the British guns "could never have been captured at Colenso had they been guarded with rifle fire . . . the Boers had to swim the river to get to them, then drag them by hand to and across the river by means of long ropes, the guns being entirely submerged as they were dragged across."

Yelverton, Esq., Ex-Chief Justice of the Bahama Islands. Chelsea : Printed and Published by F. Longman & Sons. . . . (Second Edition.) 8 pp. 8vo. 1899.

Mr. Yelverton stated that the South African War (1899-1902) was "produced by Mr. Chamberlain," and he asserted that "the Transvaal was not a colony, and the negotiations with President Kruger should have proceeded through . . . Lord Salisbury. . . . I say it is an iniquitous and unholy war."

London : Chatto and Windus. 37 pp. Quarto. 1903.

Travelling with Sir William Lockhart "just before he was appointed Commander-in-Chief in India," the author was informed by that General of the difficulties he had had to contend with to keep up his food supplies in cases of emergency. Dr. Yorke-Davies informed Sir William that he "had been able to compress into a pound weight a thoroughly efficient few days' complete ration for the soldier, ready cooked, moist and palatable, most of it being meat, and that it would keep in any climate for any required length of time. A pound tin of this would be about the size of the ordinary shilling tin of sardines." He was asked to offer his invention to the War Office, and "a ration was made up by a celebrated army contractor," but "although the ration was independently approved of by the Commander-in-Chief, and by military men of the highest rank . . . the War Office did not accept it." The writer contends that the invention would have been of great service in the South African War, 1899-1902.

The first three chapters deal with the scenes witnessed during the embarkation of the troops for South Africa from Liverpool and Southampton, and a point is made of the contrast between the enthusiasm of the send-off of the troops and the apathy with which the returned wounded were received on their arrival home. The author asserts that an English officer made the following remark to him, "I love the Boers even though I am fighting them. . . . I have been in houses here (Wynberg) where I knew there were guns stored for the enemy," &c. Mr. Young arrived at Modder River on February 17th, and states that the battle of Magersfontein was "sentimentally magnified out of all proportion to its military importance." He afterwards proceeded to Kimberley, from which town he sent a cable to his paper eulogising the De Beers Company for their assistance to the town during the siege; but in this volume he withdraws the compliment, stating that it was suggested to him "by his good friend the Censor," who, he insinuates, was under the influence of the Company, which in his opinion merely did its duty. There are some severe strictures respecting the looting and burning of farms, and it is maintained that these practices had a bad effect on the colonial soldiers, gratifying their feelings of revenge and hatred. There is an account of Lord Methuen's expedition to Boshof and the surrounding country, which resulted in the defeat and death of Villebois, and throughout the volume much praise and admiration are expressed for the former General. The author accompanied General Bryan Mahon on the Mafeking Relief Expedition, and was present at the engagements culminating in the relief of the town.

With inscription on title-page: "Percy M. Boulton, Esqre., with the Author's kind regards."

Sir Frederick visited Cape Town, Kimberley, Bechuanaland, the Transvaal, Natal, and the Eastern Province in 1889, and he gives some interesting information respecting the early days of Johannesburg, and of his trip up country. Regarding "the political situation," he observes, "The mournful mismanagement of South African affairs during the last twenty-five years, and most especially during the last decade, has been truly lamentable. . . ." In the course of the discussion on the address, Mr. John X. Merriman denied the alleged mismanagement, and deprecated the "settled and firm policy" advocated by Sir Frederick and others, observing, "Let us manage our own affairs. Laissez faire, laissez aller—that is our policy for South Africa. . . . The one thing required is the gradual bringing of the Dutch and English together."

story of the Lovedale Mission. By Robert Young. . . . With numerous illustrations. London: J. M. Dent & Co. . . . xi + 268 pp. Cr. 8vo. 1902.

It is stated that Lovedale owes its existence to the Glasgow Missionary Society, but some time elapsed before that Institution determined to start in South Africa, and "decided to establish a mission amongst the rude, war-like, and barbarous Kaffirs." The Rev. W. R. Thomson and Mr. John Bennie were the first missionaries sent, and they sailed on April 29, 1820, and later on the Rev. John Ross was sent to the New Mission, which was established in the Ncera Valley, eight or nine miles from Chumie. The first missionary station was destroyed in the Kaffir War (1834-5), and the new Lovedale was chosen on the banks of the Chumie, where fine buildings were erected in keeping with the extended objects of the mission. There is a full account of the gradual rise of the institutions connected with this mission which has proved one of the most successful in the world in spite of a certain amount of opposition displayed to it by the Cape Colonists.

MAGAZINE ARTICLES

THIS list comprises items from European, American, and Asiatic periodical literature in various languages. It does not include, as a rule, articles from South African Magazines or Scientific or Literary Societies set out at length under the heading, "Magazines, &c." It has been compiled from many and varied sources, the principal of which are mentioned individually, but owing to the enormous mass of literature of this description which has been published, it has only been found possible to make a liberal selection from the periodicals of Great Britain, the British Colonies, the United States, France, and Germany, and even from these, articles of a purely scientific interest have generally been omitted, and the list more or less confined to contributions of a more popular character.

As the items have in part been drawn from independent compilations, it is not possible to guarantee their absolute correctness, nor to indicate, in every case, either the page of the magazine at which the article commences or the month of publication.

The author acknowledges with thanks his indebtedness (in particular) to the following works :—

1. List of Magazine Articles on South Africa. Published by the Birmingham Free Libraries in 1901.
2. Index of Periodicals. Published annually by the "Review of Reviews" Office, London, from 1890-1902.

A most interesting communication dealing with the political state of South Africa at this period, more especially in connection with the position of the native races. General Butler remarked, "I feel perfectly certain that if the great mass of the good and well-meaning people of this land thoroughly realised the exact state of our relations with these wild races, the loud voice of their opinion would compel other treatment to be tried; but such people seldom really get at the truth, and none are so industrious to keep the truth hidden than men of the Bartle Frere type, who are Christian civilisers after dinner at Exeter Hall, and exterminators of the black man in Zulu or Basutoland."

If I consider the post is in danger and that assistance is necessary, I will see that you have it. I cannot send any more men from here, because I have so many other positions to maintain; we are expecting to leave to-day to take part in the capture of Colenso. We are not children any more, and must strictly adhere to our plan of campaign, or else things will go wrong, which we must endeavour to avoid.

"You must push your men further up; I have received a report from General Prinsloo that he must occupy other positions to avoid being surrounded by the enemy" (?).

Please lose no time in coming to see me, as it is impossible for me to come over to you, and it is quite possible that I shall be away to-morrow."

"I have the honour to acknowledge receipt of your letter of this day's date. In reply, I have to state that I have written to General Prinsloo informing him that, according to your orders, I sent him certain goods, which were taken away by Mr. Ceroni—nothing more. Staters are taking matters very quietly, bringing in arms, and appear glad their part is over, but many men are away with the commando, and their women say it is on account of the stories told them of our cruelties, and that they will return on hearing we are not barbarians—I think there is some truth in this about here."

CARTOGRAPHY OF SOUTH AFRICA

THE list of maps of Africa set forth below is restricted to items in the Mendelssohn Library. Any attempt to comprise the vast number of charts and maps outside the collection would involve the expenditure of more time than the compiler could at present afford, while it would in itself make a very portly volume.

The list contains maps in sheet form, as also in sheet form folded and bound, together with a large selection from those contained in published works.

The chronological arrangement permits of the representation of the gradual growth of knowledge concerning the sub-continent from the earliest days of its discovery to the present time.

The appellation of the map, as printed thereon, or its approximate name or title is given, together with its size, but in case of sheet maps the name of the compiler is appended, with the town of publication.

As regards maps in various published works, the name of the author of the book is given (or the heading under which it is catalogued), together with the title of the work, these forming a reference to the Author-Catalogue.

The selection does not include, as a rule, botanical, geological, meteorological, orographical, or technically military charts, nor unimportant sketch maps, nor reprints or replicas of previous publications possessing no special additions or features of interest. The catalogue is nevertheless, as will be seen, of considerable length, and its value, in the estimation of the compiler, is that it affords to the student or general reader the means of easily finding, within the limits indicated, a map for any of the sections of South Africa included in the Bibliography for any given period.

Additions to Bibliography whilst the work was passing through the Press.

*ALLEN, GRANT: An Army Doctor's Romance. . . . Illustrated by Harry Payne. Raphael Tuck & Sons: London, Paris, and New York. 109 pp. Cr. 8vo. 1894.

A South African Romance.

*(ALMANACS: The African Court Calendar and Directory for MDCCCXXI. Under the Sanction of Government. Compiled by A. Richert, Sen. Cape Town: Printed and sold by the Compiler at the Government Printing Office. 108 pp.; and Almanac, &c.; without pagination. 16mo. 1821.

This issue contains an article on "Preparing and Making of Wine," printed in English and Dutch. The writer accuses the Dutch East India Company of adopting a "crooked policy" with regard to viticulture, and of allowing the farmers only nine rix-dollars per leaguer for their wine, under which circumstances the growers lost their interest in the industry, and left it to the management of slaves.

An interesting and well-illustrated account of the Herero War, affording some general information respecting German South-West Africa and its natives.

*(BEAUMONT, JOHN): The Present State of the Universe. . . . To this Fourth Edition continu'd and enlarg'd with several Effigies wanting in the former Impression; as also the various Bearings of their several Ships at Sea; are added their several Territories, which are distant from them in other Parts of the World. London: Printed by Benj Motte, and are to be sold by John Nutt, near Stationers-Hall. Title; Preface, 4 pp.; Table, 4 pp.; 164 pp.; Table of Flags, &c., 69 pp. 16mo. 1704.

This quaintly-written compilation contains a short account of Monomotapa, and of King Sebastian who had ordered the execution of Father

Silveira, and it remarks of the former: "His arms are Azure, two bearded Arrows in Pale Or. Some give him a Dart and a Pickax. His Capital City is Monomotapa; the Houses are made of Wood and Earth, bound together with a sort of Bitumen; they are but two Stories and are covered with straw, or Branches of Trees; the tops are raised like a Tent: they are contrived to lie open after such a manner, as to be refreshed by the Winds, which reign according to the diversity of the Seasons: all their Fronts resemble each other, and are painted with divers colours, and embellished with many Figures: they mix certain Gums with those Colours, which make them resist the Injuries of the Weather. The Emperor's Palace is not without its Beauty."

The first edition of the work was published in 1694, in quarto, and it is ascribed in Halkett and Lang's "Dictionary of Anonymous Literature," and the "Dictionary of National Biography," to John Beaumont.

(BEAZLEY, C. R.: The Dawn of Modern Geography. . . . 3 vols. Oxford: At the Clarendon Press. 8vo. 1897-1906.

Vol. III. contains a very early map of the continent of Africa included in a "World Map" entitled "The Laurentian Portolana of 1351." The compiler appears to have had considerably more information respecting the coasts of the continent than Sanuto, whose map dates back to 1321. Professor Beazley remarks that "the Laurentian Portolana gives us an Africa startlingly in advance of the ordinary notions of the time (circa 1351), an Africa which in fact shows a nearer approach to general correctness than is to be found in any work anterior to the discovery of the Cape in 1486."

The speaker advocated the "application and extension" of the principle embodied in the "Glen Grey Act" throughout South Africa.

*BIGELOW, POULTENEY: The Latter-Day Fighting Animal; being a few notes made from personal experience with the Soldiers of Uncle Sam, John Bull, and Oom Paul. . . . In "The Anglo-Saxon Review," vol. iv, pp. 175-189. John Lane: London and New York. Folio. 1900.

The writer remarks, "The Boers are fighting against alleged tyranny; the Englishmen are fighting to make the Boers more liberal. Both are convinced that the other is wrong. . . ." It is observed that "as to the soldiers of Oom Paul, they are the true 'nation in arms.' Not only are all the men fighting, but the women as well are doing their share. The Boer fights the Englishman exactly as the trappers and Indians of the Upper Ohio fought General Braddock. The Boer has the courage of all men brought up in savage surroundings, especially men of our great German race. The Dutchman in all times has given proof of high moral and physical valour, and he is by no means a degenerate."

Account of the Second Battalion in the South African War, 1899-1902. William Blackwood & Sons: Edinburgh and London. xiii + 241 pp. 8vo. 1908.

There is an account of the services of the regiment in South Africa, 1846-52, when the troops engaged in the Kaffir War, under Generals Somerset, Sir Harry Smith, Sir George Cathcart, and other leaders, and took part in the Basuto campaign against Moshesh. The second part of the volume deals with the South African War, 1899-1902.

Published by Permission of the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty. London: Printed for George Nicol. . . . Title; 8 pp. without pagination; 264 pp. Quarto. 1792.

The ship arrived at Simon's Bay on May 24, 1788, and the author had interviews with Governor Van Der Graaff and Colonel Gordon, the latter giving him some information respecting the survivors of the wreck of the Grosvenor and the efforts to discover them. The Bounty remained thirty-eight days at the Cape, but little information is afforded respecting the Settlement.

A somewhat bitter production, with coloured engravings of a heated anglophobe character and poems set to music illustrating the scenes, which refer to the South African War, 1899-1902. One of the views depicts "L'Île Maudite" (St. Helena), where the shade of the Emperor Napoleon I. is seen conversing with General Cronje.

*BOYD, C. W.: Pretoria. In "The Anglo-Saxon Review," Vol. IV. pp. 190-196. John Lane: London and New York. Folio. 1900.

An interesting account of the Transvaal capital at this period. Mr. Boyd remarks of Dr. Leyds that he was "a vastly pleasant fellow of no genuine convictions, though with a decided genius for intrigue and a good servant to his paymasters. . . ." The author asserts that "Pretoria is an English town; 'the boys' only ride in on business, great strapping fellows, gaunt or broad-framed to excess, shirtless and brown, and showing, for all the world, like small Scotch 'tenant' farmers, lacking soap and water. Except in the Raad and on the President's stoep, you might live for months in the Boer capital and never hear a word of kitchen-Dutch."

- *CHURCHILL, Lady RANDOLPH: Letters from a Hospital Ship. . . In "The Anglo-Saxon Review," vol. v. pp. 218-237. John Lane: London and New York. Folio. 1900.

The Maine arrived at Cape Town in January 1900, and the writer gives an animated account of the state of affairs in the capital of the Cape Colony at this period. Two days after, the ship sailed for Durban, where the hospital ship was soon full of wounded soldiers. Lady Randolph relates some interesting anecdotes of the invalids and of her experiences in trips to Chieveley Camp, Ladysmith, &c. &c., being escorted to the latter town by her son Winston, and she remarks, "This is how we went to Ladysmith; it was an excellent way of seeing everything, as the whole of the fighting of the last two months has been along the line; we could see and understand everything with the help of Winston's graphic tongue."

- *COODE, Sir JOHN.

- CORY, G. E.: The Rise of South Africa. A History of the Origin of South African Colonisation, and of its Development towards the East from the Earliest Times to 1857. By G. E. Cory, M.A., King's College, Cambridge, Professor in Rhodes University College, Grahamstown, South Africa. In four Volumes. Vol. I. from the Earliest Times to the Year 1820. Pp. 21, 420. With Map, Plans, and Illustrations. Longmans, Green & Co. . . . London, New York, Bombay, and Calcutta. Roy. 8vo. 1910.

The volume is mainly confined to a history of the Eastern Province, the writer having obtained considerable information from the Records in the Civil Commissioner's Office in Grahamstown, while he has drawn extensively upon the works of other South African historians, and "made free use of the 'Records of Cape Colony' compiled by Dr. Theal."

Mr. Cory dwells on "the patient heroism of the Dutch inhabitants in their incessant struggles to preserve their homes and properties," and deprecates the constant attacks made "in high official quarters" concerning the "cruelty and oppression of the Dutch towards the native races."

A defence of the Boers, and a deprecation of the South African War (1899-1902), which the writer denounced as "an unnecessary war brought on by terrible diplomacy." Lord Courtney observed that "there is not a single sin which you can bring against the Transvaal Government that you cannot bring with greater force against Mr. Rhodes's system of governing Rhodesia."

Lisboa: Imprensa Nacional. 318 pp. 8vo. 1859.

This work forms Vol. IV. of the "Estatística das Possessões Portuguezas," and is in the second series, which was entirely written by Francisco Maria Bordalo. The volume is entitled "Statistics of Mozambique and its Dependencies," and gives an exhaustive account of Portuguese

South-East Africa at this period; including some particulars respecting certain districts which later on were acquired by the British South Africa Company and are now included in Rhodesia. There are seven maps in the work, which is perhaps the most important book on Portuguese South-East Africa published in the middle of the nineteenth century.

DE MARRE, J.: Bespiegelungen over Gods wijsheid en Eerkroon voor de Caab de Goede Hoop. Amsterdam: A. Wor en de Erve G. Onder de Linden. Quarto. 1746.

*(DOBBIN, GERTRUDE): Jill's Rhodesian Philosophy, or The Dam Farm. By Gertrude Page. London: Hurst & Blackett, Ltd. 230 pp. Cr. 8vo. 1910.

An interesting account of the experiences of a modern settler in Rhodesia, written from the point of view of an English lady, evidently unaccustomed to farm life, either at home or in the colonies. The work is characterised by the cheerful and humorous description of the difficulties which surround the housekeeper in the more remote regions of the Veld, and by the practical lessons learnt by the writer in adapting herself to circumstances which had to be inevitably and unalterably faced for good or evil.

*ECKENBRECHER, MARGARETE VON; (& Others): Deutsch-Südwestafrika; Kriegs- und Friedensbilder. Selbsterlebnisse beschildert von Frau Margarete Von Eckenbrecher, Frau Helene Von Falkenhausen, Stabarzt Dr. Kuhn, Oberleutnant Stuhlman. Mit 7 Bildern und 1 Porträt. Leipzig: Verlag von Wilhelm Weicher. 79 pp. 8vo. 1907.

Personal sketches and experiences in German South-West Africa, with a view of Swakopmund and other illustrations. First Lieutenant Stuhlman observes that although German South-West Africa is not an agricultural country, it has all the preliminary requirements for cattle raising, but an energetic and clever population is essential to cope with the difficulties of the Colony.

*ESCOMBE, The Rt. Hon. HARRY: Port Natal, Sir John Coode, and the half-million. An Address to the Tax-payer. . . . Pietermaritzburg, Natal: P. Davis & Sons. . . . 56 pp. 8vo. 1878.

A useful little manual. The author remarks, "English words are rapidly finding their way into the Taal, but where so many nationalities are engaged in business, and where the Kaffir and other native races have to be controlled by one language, it is safe to assert that the Taal will continue to be the dialect of all South Africans.

- *FRENSSSEN, GUSTAV : Peter Moor's Journey to South-West Africa. A Narrative of the German Campaign. By Gustav Frenssen. Translated from the Original, with the Consent of the Author, by Margaret May Ward. London : Archibald Constable & Co., Ltd. 244 pp. Cr. 8vo. 1908.

The translator observes, "When I read a little German book about the South-West African War of 1903-4, I wished that every one else might read it. To me it was absorbingly interesting and beautifully told."

- *FULLER, Sir THOMAS EKINS : The Right Honourable Cecil John Rhodes : a Monograph and a Reminiscence. . . . With Portraits and other Illustrations. Longmans, Green & Co., London . . . New York, Bombay, & Calcutta. xii + 276 pp. 8vo. 1910.

Sir Thomas states that he has "written a personal narrative" of Mr. Rhodes' life, as it was associated with his own "in an intimacy of many years," with "as complete an account and estimate of his public career as the scheme of the book permitted." The volume is of an interesting character, and throws considerable light on the personality of the great statesman, his life at Groote Schuur, and his relations with his personal friends, and his political friends and foes.

Mention is made of the scheme "for the purchase of Delagoa Bay from the Portuguese Government," in which, it is asserted, Mr. Rhodes was associated with Lord Rothschild, Sir Thomas observing, "I found Mr. Rhodes in his house at Groote Schuur in a state of great excitement. He took me into his study and said, 'I am hourly expecting a cable from Lord Rothschild announcing the completion of the negotiations for the purchase of Delagoa Bay. Everything seems going favourably.'" However, the business did not come off, and later on Sir Thomas had an interview with the British Under Secretary for Foreign Affairs on the subject. He says, "A curious glimpse was then afforded me of European politics and diplomacy. Certain Governments in Europe came to know of these negotiations, and that a revolution in Portugal was feared if the negotiations were completed. But these Governments were in fear of revolutionary tendencies in their own countries, and addressed friendly remonstrances to the British Government against a step which might influence their own people. . . . In this way a scheme that promised much was thwarted." Writing of the Raid, Sir Thomas observes, "However much he (Rhodes) was able to conceal his feelings from other men, he was 'hard hit' by the Raid and its consequences to Jameson and himself. The pallor and distress which Mr. Schreiner, his Attorney-General, saw in his face, when the news of the disaster first came from the North—and which led him to wander on the mountain for two or three days, refusing to see any one—remained with him for weeks. His recital of what really happened deeply moved me." The writer, though at times differing from Mr. Rhodes on political matters, appears to have ever held in him great respect, honour, and affection, and he remarks, "The memory, almost the reputation, of Cecil Rhodes may be left in the keeping of his mourners. If ever a man 'died beloved' it was he."

(From the London, Edinburgh, and Dublin Philosophical Magazine and Journal of Science for May and succeeding months, 1848.) Pp. 12, 8, 10, 7, 14. 8vo. 1848.

An exhaustive review of Sir John Herschel's work.

- *(GARRETT, EDMUND): Edmund Garrett. A Memoir, by E. T. Cook. With Portrait. London: Edward Arnold. x + 284 pp. 8vo. 1909.

An excellent biography of this brilliant journalist, whose connection with South Africa extended from 1889 to practically the time of his death (1907), although he left the Cape in the autumn of 1900. Particulars are afforded of Mr. Garrett's career as a journalist and politician in Cape Town, with many interesting extracts from letters, articles, and interviews, throwing a vivid light on the acute period of South African political life before and after the Jameson Raid and the South African War. Much is related that is almost unique respecting Mr. Rhodes, and the volume is a valuable addition to the history of a momentous era in the sub-continent.

*GRIFFITHS, Major ARTHUR: The Crimea and the Cape: Parallel and Contrast. In "The Anglo-Saxon Review," vol. iv. pp. 98-114. John Lane: London and New York. Folio. 1900.

The writer observes, "Neither the present nor the old war was creditable from a military point of view. . . . We embarked upon both wars too lightly, with no true appreciation of the tremendous issues or the magnitude of the approaching conflict." With regard to the "Commissariat Department," it is stated that, "As head of the department a Mr. Filder was fished out from the half-pay lists, where he had vegetated since the Peninsula, and on which he had grown grey, hopeless of further service. To assist him a small staff of officers was hurriedly got together from all quarters of the globe, many of them young and inexperienced, and none trained to the practical business of war. It was early seen that the department would be unequal to the burden laid upon it."

*(HAGGARD, H. RIDER): King Solomon's Wives; or the Phantom Mines. By Hyder Ragged. London: Vizetelly & Co. . . . viii x 125 pp. Cr. 8vo. 1887.

HAMILTON, Captain ALEXANDER: A New Account of the East Indies. Giving an exact and copious description of the Situation, Product, Manufactures, Laws, Customs, Religion, Trade, &c., of all the Countries and Islands which lie between the Cape of Good Hope and the Island of Japan. . . . Illustrated with Maps and Sculptures. . . . In two volumes.

Vol. I. xxxii + 400 pp.

Vol. II. vii + 320 pp.

London: Printed for C. Hitch in Paternoster-row; and A. Millar, opposite to Katherine Street in the Strand. 2 vols. 8vo. 1744.

In the first chapter of the first volume there is "a traditional account of the first settling of Europeans at the Cape of Good Hope," in which it is observed that "the first Europeans that settled at Cabo de bona Esperanza, or in English, the Cape of Good Hope, were the English, in Queen Elizabeth's Time; but the Natives were so unsociable and indocile, that they thought fit to leave it." Mention is made of subsequent attempts on the part of the English to found a settlement at the Cape, and it is stated that three convicts were landed there "in order to learn the Language, to serve for Interpreters, and to inspect, as far as they could, into the Manners and Customs of the native Hottentots," &c. &c. These men were left at the Cape for three years, but failed to acquire the language, and were taken back to England. Some particulars are afforded of the Portuguese settlements at Mozambique and Delagoa Bay, but very little is said respecting the Dutch Settlement at the Cape, the author remarking, "The English call'd generally there, in their Way to and from India, in former Times, for Refreshments; but of late the white Hottentots will not permit the poor Britons to carry on board their ships any cattle, Sheep, or Fowls with Life in them. . . . The black Hottentots would shew the English much more Humanity, if the white did not restrain them; and so I leave them, and proceed to the Eastward."

- *(HARVEY, WILLIAM HENRY): Memoir of W. H. Harvey, M.D., F.R.S., &c. &c., late Professor of Botany, Trinity College, Dublin. With Selections from his Journal and Correspondence. . . . London: Bell and Daldy. . . . xvi + 372 pp. 8vo. 1869.

Mr. Harvey was born at Youghal, Ireland, in February 1811, and acquired his early love for botany in "the companionship of an old gentlewoman, an intimate friend of his mother, whose delight was to carry him to the garden, and teach him the names of the beautiful flowers with which it abounded." He was educated in Ireland, and devoted his early youth and manhood to the study of botany, making the acquaintance of many of the more celebrated students of the science at this period. In the latter part of the year 1834, his brother Joseph was offered the appointment of Colonial Treasurer at the Cape, and it was arranged that William Harvey should accompany him. They did not, however, leave for South Africa till July 12, 1835, when they sailed in the Carnatic, arriving in Table Bay on September 17th. Joseph Harvey's health soon gave way and he became invalided, and his duties had to be carried out by his brother, but as it soon became evident that the patient would not recover in South Africa, the two brothers left for England in April 1836. William, during his residence in the Cape, had paid considerable attention to the botany of the Colony, and he became friendly with Baron Ludwig, to whom he bore a letter of introduction from Sir William Hooker, with whom he kept up a constant correspondence. Joseph Harvey died at sea on April 26th, and on his brother's arrival in England he was appointed to succeed him in the post of Treasurer to the Cape, to which he returned on August 19, 1836. Here while pursuing his official duties he devoted his leisure to his botanical studies, and he soon became one of the best authorities of the science in South Africa. After some visits to England, Mr. Harvey finally left South Africa at the close of 1841 as his health had given way, and in 1844 he was appointed Professor of Botany and Curator of Trinity College, Dublin. Subsequently he visited the United States, India, Australia, the Friendly Islands, &c. &c. Mr. Harvey died on May 15, 1866. During his lifetime he commenced, and in some cases completed, many important works on the Cape Flora, &c., besides other works of the greatest value connected with botanical research. The biography contains many interesting letters referring to social and political matters at the Cape, a short biography of Dr. Harvey's works, and a portrait.

- *HERSCHEL, Sir JOHN F. W. (Bart): Results of Astronomical Observations made during the years 1834-5-6-7-8, at the Cape of Good Hope; being the Completion of a Telescopic Survey of the whole surface of the Visible Heavens commenced in 1825, by

Sir John F. W. Herschel, Bart, K.H. (&c. &c. &c.). . . . London :
Published by Smith, Elder & Co. . . . xx + 452 pp. xvii Plates.
Quarto. 1847.

This valuable astronomical work details the observations and discoveries of the author at a temporary Observatory erected by him at "Feldhuysen, or Feldhausen, about six miles from Cape Town, in the direction of Wynberg." The volume was published with the financial assistance of Algernon, Duke of Northumberland, who died, however, before its publication. This copy contains a sepia drawing of "The Herschel Obelisk at Feldhausen," with a printed quarto sheet with the following inscription, which is on the obelisk: "Here stood from MDCCCXXIV to MDCCCXXXVIII the reflecting telescope of Sir John F. W. Herschel, Baronet, who, during a residence of four years in this colony, contributed as largely by his benevolent exertions to the cause of education and humanity as by his eminent talents to the discovery of scientific truth. Erected MDCCCXLI." A vignette of the obelisk will be found on page 452.

It is stated that the object of the volume "is to co-ordinate the geological and archæological notes" accumulated during the author's many visits to the Orange River Free State. The scope of the work includes remarks on the geology and superficial deposits and pans of the Colony, together with observations on "the prehistoric period" and the "farming prospects." There is a bibliography containing notices of sixty-five works relating to the subject matter of Mr. Johnston's monograph, and there are several interesting illustrations of Bushman paintings, &c. &c.

*(JOURDAIN, JOHN) : The Journal of John Jourdain, 1608-1617, describing his Experiences in Arabia, India, and the Malay Archipelago. Edited by William Foster, B.A. . . . Cambridge : Printed for the Hakluyt Society. lxxxii × 394 pp. 8vo. 1905.

John Jourdain was born circa 1573 at Lyme Regis, in Dorsetshire, and entered the service of the British East India Company in 1607. He took part in an expedition known as "the Company's Fourth Voyage," was appointed "Chief Merchant" of the Ascension, and sailed in this vessel on March 14, 1608. The two ships of the expedition (the Ascension and the Union) came to anchor in Table Bay on July 14, 1608, and they remained in the harbour for over two months. Jourdain's Journal gives an interesting account of the stay at the Cape, entitled "What passed in the tyme of our beinge att Saldanha, with a description of the cuntrye." He notes that the names of Captains "Keelling," "Hawkens," "Myddleton," and others were found on the engraved stones which were used as a kind of Post Office at the Cape, and which indicated that these commanders had visited Table Bay during the preceding year. Jourdain was fully alive to the value of the Cape as a port of call for the route to India, and remarks: "Nowe howe necessarie this place would bee for shippinge to refresh their sicke men, both out and home, I leave it to your better judgments," and he refers to the wealth which might be acquired by trading in ivory, hides, oil, and seal-skins, and to the fact that the "cuntrye at present doth abound with fishe and flesh in great plentie"; whilst building stone and timber were easily available. The cattle on "Penguin Island" were stated to be "the fattest I ever sawe." Jourdain was killed in a sea battle with the Dutch at Palani, in the Malay Peninsula, and it is curious to note that a "white flag" incident appears to have occurred at this very early stage of the rivalry between the British and the Dutch.

KIPLING, RUDYARD: The Five Nations. Methuen & Co. 2nd Edition. xiii + 215 pp. 8vo. 1903.

Contains several poems referring to the South African War, 1899-1902.

*KIPLING, RUDYARD: Traffics and Discoveries. . . . Macmillan & Co., Ltd. . . . London. vi × 393 pp. 12mo. 1908.

The short stories relating to South Africa include "The Captive," "A Sahibs' War," and "The Comprehension of Private Copper"; and the former includes a most quaint but lifelike representation of an old Boer Commandant of the best type in the character of Adrian Van Zyl. Equally characteristic of the more obnoxious specimens of the up-country Burghers is the picture of the young Boer in "Private Copper," and it is interesting to read the author's ideas respecting the attitude of the descendants of the loyal British in the Transvaal twenty years after the days of Majuba and the Convention of Pretoria, when brought face to face with the realities of the South African War.

*KIRKLAND, CAROLINE: Some African Highways. A Journey of Two American Women to Uganda and the Transvaal. . . . With an Introduction by Lt.-Gen. Baden-Powell. With Illustrations from photographs, and a map. Duckworth & Co., London. Pp. xvi, 11-345. 8vo. 1908.

Pages 246-269 are devoted to a short description of Johannesburg, containing some information respecting the Chinese Labour Agitation, and the condition of the Chinese labourers at the Rand. The author observes: "Lord Milner did excellently in the days when war was rending the land. He had a firm hand and a dogged tenacity of purpose. But when peace descended and tact and conciliation became necessary, he was found wanting. . . . His going was almost as welcome as his coming had been. . . . Lord Selborne . . . has proved himself a persona grata to the conflicting elements."

- *LYDEKKER, R.: The Game Animals of Africa. . . . London: Rowland Ward, Ltd. . . . xix + 484 pp. Roy. 8vo. 1908.

The author observes that "the work in its present state can only be regarded as a preliminary attempt to give something like a complete account of the game-fauna of the African continent." Such portions of the letterpress of "The Great and Small Game of Africa" (edited by H. A. Bryden) as were written by Mr. Lydekker have been, when suitable, included in this work, which also includes replicas of the plates reduced to suit this volume. The contributions of many writers to the former publication have also been included—condensed and modified—but much of the work is entirely new.

- *MEYER, H.: Hope for the North-West and the Cape generally. Edinburgh. 3 pp. 8vo. 1905.

The writer advocates the establishment of irrigation works, and the instruction of school children in botany and natural history.

- *(MISSIONARY GUIDE-BOOK): The Missionary Guide-Book; or, A Key to the Protestant Missionary Map of the World. . . . Illustrated by forty-five woodcuts, representing the costume of each people. Seeley, Burnside, & Seeley. . . . London. xiv + 472 pp. Roy. 8vo. 1846.

The South African section comprises about fourteen pages, and its contents include a description of the Cape and its natives, with particulars of the Missionary Societies in South Africa at this period. There are two pages of statistics relating to the Mission Stations and a few illustrations.

- *(MISSIONARY REGISTER): The Missionary Register for MDCCCXVIII. Containing the Principal Transactions . . . of the Church Missionary Society. London: Printed by R. Watts. . . . Published by L. B. Seeley. . . . Sold also by J. Hatchard. . . . 527 pp. 8vo. 1818.

At the commencement of the volume is an "Alphabetical List of the Protestant Missionary Stations and Missionaries throughout the World" at this period, and this list contains particulars of several South African stations, with short accounts of the history of the mission and its leaders. There are a number of reports respecting the various missionary stations in South Africa scattered throughout the volume.

- *(NATAL): (ALMANAC, 1876): The Natal Almanac, Directory, and Yearly Register, 1876. Pietermaritzburg: P. Davis & Sons. . . . xvi + 308 pp. 12mo. 1875.

The editor refers to the advent of Sir Garnet Wolseley as Governor, and to the "inauguration of a scheme for the commencement of a system of railway communication throughout the Colony." It is mentioned that the editor, Mr. T. Foster, died when the edition was in the press and uncompleted.

- *NAUHAUS, F. W.: Die Mission in Südafrika. III. Am 20 Dezember, 1878, vorgetragen in Verein für Erdkunde zu Dresden. (Dresden.) Pp. 125-166. 8vo. 1878.

The writer, at the age of twenty-five, went to the Cape as a missionary in the year 1845, and he affords some information respecting the state of the town and the Colony at this period, together with a short sketch of their earlier history.

- *NILSEN, Captain J.: Leaves from the Log of the Homeward Bound, or Eleven Months at Sea in an Open Boat. London: Chapman & Hall. v + 133 pp. Cr. 8vo. 1887.

Captain Nilsen was born in Norway, "and bred from his childhood to the life of a seafarer. He arrived . . . at Cape Town as mate of a Dutch brig, which was condemned as unseaworthy. He then entered Baker's Horse, and served on the frontier in the Basuto war. Afterwards he turned his excellent technical education to account as a builder and contractor in the Orange Free State, where he had become a prosperous settler, when the old Norse blood reasserted its supremacy, and the enterprise which is recorded in these pages was conceived." Captain Nilsen built a boat in which he sailed round the Cape, and up the West Coast of Africa, arriving at Dover on March 27, 1887.

- *O'DONNELL, F. HUGH: A History of the Irish Parliamentary Party.

Vol. I. xiii + 508 pp.

Vol. II. viii + 494 pp. 8vo. 1910.

The author observes: "I can now confide to the general public . . . that nearly every step in opposition to the South Africa Bill of 1877, confirming and regularising the seizure of the Boer Republic in the spring of that year, was discussed and arranged with the authorised representatives of the invaded Republic, including . . . Paul Kruger and . . . Dr. Jorissen." Mr. O'Donnell refers to the question of the "thoroughness" of Dr. Jorissen's "hostility to the annexation," which was called in question "through his subsequent acceptance of a post as legal official under the British administration," and he states, "I have been assured that no such interpretation can be justly placed upon his action"; he does not, however, give any reasons why such an interpretation should not be placed. It is curious to hear that Cetywayo was described by President Kruger as "Carnarvon's bully," and it is interesting to observe how the cause of the Boers was exploited to obstruct the Government by a party of politicians who, according to the author, knew nothing of the very Bill they were opposing—with one exception—himself.

Frontispiece; Title; Dedication (3 pp.); License (2 pp.); 4 pp.; Catalogue, 2 pp.; 767 pp. Folio. 1670.

This early English compilation is based almost entirely on Dapper's work, reproducing the plates and maps in that publication.

- *O'MEARA, P.: Railway Extension in South Africa on the Longridge System. Second Edition. . . . Durban: Printed at the "Natal Mercury" Office. . . . 24 pp. 8vo. 1877.

Mr. O'Meara was a strong advocate of what he calls "cheap railways," and a great supporter of the ideas of Mr. James Atkinson Longridge as expressed in his work, "Cheap Railways for the Colonies." He estimated that by the adoption of Mr. Longridge's method the Natal railways could be constructed for about one and a half million sterling, or at the rate of about £3000 per mile.

- *O'MEARA, P.: Sir John Coode's Harbour Plans for Port Natal, 1877, with grounds for their entire rejection. . . . Illustrated with Photographs by Mr. Kisch. Natal: Printed at the "Natal Mercury"; Office, Durban. 16 pp. 8vo. 1878.

The author, while admitting that it is a "bold undertaking" to call in question the plans of Sir John Coode by any one who is not an engineer, nevertheless maintains that Sir John's reports exhibit "manifest inconsistencies . . . downright evidence of doubt, and even probability of failure."

- *O'MEARA, P.: The Harbour Question. Communicated by Mr. O'Meara, M.I.C.E. Reprinted from the "Natal Colonist," Jan. 1880. 35 pp. 8vo. 1880.

The writer criticises Sir John Coode's proposals, and suggests an alternative scheme. The pamphlet contains a plan of the Natal Harbour "showing the works proposed by P. O'Meara . . . 1800."

- *O'NEIL, Rev. J. : A Phrase Book in English and Sindebele, with a full Vocabulary. For the Use of Settlers in Matabeleland. Compiled by Rev. J. O'Neil, S.J., of Empanjeni Mission, Plumtree. Bulawayo : Ellis Allen. . . . London : Simpkin, Marshall, Hamilton, Kent & Co., Ltd. xi + 104 pp. 16mo. 1909.

The author remarks that the object of the work "is to help Europeans who have dealings with the natives of Matabeleland." Reference is made to the extensive use of "Kitchen Kaffir" by the white and coloured inhabitants of Rhodesia, and it is stated that this jargon "is in reality a queer jumble of English, Cape Dutch, and truncated native words, utterly devoid of grammar or meaning."

- *(ORIENTAL NAVIGATOR): The Oriental Navigator; or new directions for sailing to and from the East Indies, China, New Holland, &c. &c. &c. . . . being a necessary companion to the Complete East India Pilot. . . . Second Edition—with considerable Additions. London : Printed and Published by Robert Laurie and James Whittle, Map, Chart, and Printsellers, No. 53 Fleet Street. xi + 655 pp. Quarto. 1801.

Pages 39-51 give full directions "for going into and out of Table Bay and Saldanha Bay"; a description of False Bay, with directions for sailing into and out of Simon's Bay; accounts of the Cape and Bank of Agulhas, &c. &c. &c. Other sections give instructions referring to navigation in other parts of the coasts of South Africa and its islands.

- *PARSONS, HAROLD G. : Our Colonial Kingdoms (Kingdoms of the Common Crown). In "The Anglo-Saxon Review," vol. v. pp. 205-217. John Lane : London and New York. Folio. 1900.

Mr. Parsons compares the position of Dr. Leyds at the close of the nineteenth century with that of Dr. Franklin at the end of the eighteenth century, the former having been the agent on the Continent of the Boer Republics and the latter the agent in Paris of our revolted American Colonies. Reference is made to the failure of Dr. Leyds' negotiations: "Franklin having been a more effective ambassador of treason, as he was in every way a greater man, than the Javanese diplomatist."

The author maintains that "the only true link of the three Commonwealths (African, Australian, and Canadian) to our existing Empire must be through the Common Crown."

- *PAYN, F. W. : Cromwell on Foreign Affairs : together with Four Essays on International Matters. . . . London: C. J. Clay and Sons. . . . Pp 7, 164. 8vo. 1901.

The two essays entitled "Intervention among States" and "The Burning of Boer Farms . . ." refer to the South African War, 1899-1902, from the international military point of view. The writer states that the war dragged on because the "English military staff, headed by the Commander-in-Chief, have deliberately allowed the Boers to retain several thousand effective bases for supplies and information all over the country in the shape of farmhouses." He observes: "Lord Roberts and the rest of them had imbibed the 'modern view' of modern jurists and philanthropists . . . that 'private property is inviolable by a belligerent,' and that 'war operations should be confined to combatants only.' No more pernicious nonsense has ever been put forward."

*PHILLIPS, LIONEL: Past and Future in South Africa. . . . In "The Anglo-Saxon Review," vol. iii. pp. 191-203. John Lane: London and New York. Folio. 1899.

The writer gives a short synopsis of the history of South Africa in the last quarter of the nineteenth century, and suggests that the retrocession of the Transvaal was by no means "an act of supreme generosity," but—according to a speech of Lord Kimberley—the Liberal Government of that day were disinclined to go on fighting under the fear of the Free State and Colonial Boers joining with the Transvaal, "and the conclusion, whether it was wise or not, was that, painful to the last degree as it was for them to make peace under such circumstances, they were taking the right course to avert the calamity they saw pending."

*SANDBERG, Dr. C. G. S.: The Oil Prospects of Central British South Africa. A paper read before the Institution of Mining Engineers . . . General Meeting at London, June 5, 1908. Excerpt from the "Transactions of the Institution of Mining Engineers." Newcastle-upon-Tyne: Published by the Institution. 14 pp. Roy. 8vo. 1908.

The speaker alluded to the non-success of attempts to discover oil wells in South Africa, and suggests that these attempts had been carried out in a loose and haphazard way, instead of being supervised by thoroughly competent specialists. Attention is drawn to the "Karoo Oil Prospects" and to the "Oil Shale Occurrence on the Elandsdraai Farm, Cape Colony," and the "Bloemfontein Townlands Bore-Holes." Dr. Sandberg was of the opinion that, "from a geological point of view, the strata of the Karoo Series do not exclude the possibility of large and workable oil-deposits being present therein."

The South African sections include pp. 48-77 and pp. 136-145, and contain much interesting information respecting the religious beliefs and customs of the Hottentots, Bushmen, and Kaffirs, whilst many references to the sub-continent will be found in the volume.

- SEEMAN, BERTHOLD : Narrative of the Voyage of H.M.S. Herald during the years 1845-51, under the Command of Captain Henry Kellett, R.N., C.B. ; being a circumnavigation of the Globe. . . .

Vol. I. xvi + 322 pp.

Vol. II. vii. + 302 pp. 8vo. 1853.

The expedition arrived at the mouth of the Great Fish River on March 1, 1851, and anchored in Simon's Bay on March 6. The work contains some references to the botany on the Cape Peninsula and the vicinity of Cape Town. The management of the "Government Garden" is severely condemned, and the author remarks that the Institution "is now . . . retrograding, chiefly through the mismanagement of the Commissioners . . . who, by a series of measures, have brought not only ridicule upon themselves but the whole institution ; and unless the chief direction is vested in a scientific person, this establishment . . . must soon fail to accomplish the object for which it was originally designed."

- *SELBORNE, The Right Hon. WILLIAM WALDEGRAVE PALMER, Earl SELBORNE : The Native Question of South Africa. Anti-Slavery and Aborigines Protection Society : London. 32 pp. 8vo. 1909.

The speaker emphasised "the responsibility of the Government and not of Parliament" in reference to the Native Problem in South Africa, and discusses the question, "How is the Government to combine with that Parliamentary system which is necessary for the whites, that personal, consistent, and continuous system of rule which is necessary for natives?" Referring to the franchise question as regards the natives, he remarks : "The natives of South Africa must be led up to the franchise in exactly the same gradual way as the white men were. . . ."

*(SOUTH AFRICAN WAR, 1899-1902): (BLACK WATCH): A Short History of the Black Watch. . . . To which is added an account of the Second Battalion in the South African War, 1899-1902. William Blackwood & Sons: Edinburgh and London. xiii + 241 pp. 8vo. 1908.

The second battalion formed part of the Highland Brigade commanded by Major-General Wauchope, and embarked for South Africa on the Orient in October 1899. The force joined Lord Methuen's army, and were present at the battle of Magersfontein, where the losses of the battalion were 93 killed, 209 wounded, and 42 captured out of its strength of 943 officers and men. The Black Watch subsequently took part in the engagements at Koedoesberg, Paardeberg, Poplar Grove, and the occupation of Bloemfontein, and were finally quartered at Ladybrand, where they were stationed for eleven months. The battalion, 736 strong, embarked for India on the S.S. Ionian on October 2, 1902. See (BLACK WATCH).

*(SOUTH AFRICAN WAR, 1899-1902): (IMPRESSIONS AND OPINIONS): Impressions and Opinions. In "The Anglo-Saxon Review," vol. iii. pp. 248-256. John Lane: London and New York. Folio. 1899.

The writer observes, "It seems quite a matter of course now that we should have by far the largest army ever sent abroad by Great Britain engaged in the task of overcoming the Boers of the Transvaal and the Orange Free State. . . . The belief of the South African Englishman in the cowardice of the Boer is curious, and, in some respects, unaccountable; but of its existence there can be very little doubt. . . . But then we did not quite grasp the Boer character, nor did the 'experts,' whether they were at Johannesburg, Cape Town, or Downing Street. . . . When we began the war we did not know 'what men they were these Boers.' We had to find out for ourselves in various expensive and disagreeable ways."

- *(SOUTH AFRICAN WAR, 1899-1902): (IMPRESSIONS AND OPINIONS): In "The Anglo-Saxon Review," vol. v. pp. 238-248. John Lane: London and New York. Folio. 1900.

The writer refers to the "wild fervour of the demonstration over Mafeking," and remarks that "It has been noticed as a not ungenerous trait in the national temper that the surrender of Cronje's army was taken with comparative calmness. There was no such exultation over the defeat of a brave enemy as there was in the deliverance of a body of valiant British troops." Some allusion is made to the mass of publications issued on the war, and it is suggested that "perhaps, when South Africa settles down and gives up fighting and civil dissension, it will produce a native literature. . . . Romance, epic, lyric, there is room for all in the strange and fascinating regions where English, Dutch, Bantu, and Hottentot have jostled one another this hundred years. Yet there is scarcely any South African literature. . . ."

- *(SOUTH AFRICAN WAR, 1899-1902): (MILITARY NOTES): Military Notes on the Dutch Republics of South Africa. Compiled in Section B, Intelligence Division, War Office. (Secret.) Revised June, 1899. (A. 596.) No Printer's Name. (London.) 119 pp. Roy. 8vo. 1899.

These valuable notes throw considerable light on the information in the possession of the Intelligence Department respecting the armaments and intentions of the Transvaal at a considerable period before the outbreak of the South African War, 1899-1902, and prove that, to a great extent, the strictures on this department were unjustified and unwarranted. The notes allude to "the enormous quantity of rifles . . . in possession of the South African Republic," and to the resolution "passed, early in February 1898, instructing the Commandant-General to furnish to the Executive Council a return of the armament which should be ordered for arming the Free State 'in certain eventualities,' . . . with a view to its being considered at a secret session of the Volksraad." Particulars are afforded of "Field Artillery Armament," "Fortress Armament," and "Machine Guns" possessed by the Transvaal, and it is stated "that the supply of ammunition in the possession of the Republic is sufficient for a protracted campaign."

Full descriptions are afforded of the Forts of Pretoria and Johannesburg, with sketches and plans, but it is stated that General Joubert had openly disapproved of their erection. From the information afforded it seems that the Boers had to a certain extent decided on a plan of campaign, and in a note on page 52 it is asserted that "General Joubert said, in conversation in March 1898, that 'a scheme for . . . offensive action had been drawn up by a German officer, but was not yet approved.' A report from a reliable source, dated June 1899, states that the present Boer plan of campaign contemplates a concentration with the Free State forces west of the Drakensberg, and an advance on Ladysmith through Van Reenen's Pass."

It is further stated, referring to the plans of the Boers: "If, as is most likely, they elect to hold their frontier line, or, as is not improbable at the outset of the war, boldly take the offensive against Natal or Kimberley, a serious engagement would necessarily ensue before our columns have penetrated far into the Republican territory."

The writer observes, "It may . . . be anticipated that while the Boers will show some of their old skill in guerilla warfare on ground favourable to such tactics, yet they will have but little chance of success if compelled to meet, in the open plains of the Free State or the Transvaal, an adequate force of disciplined troops, complete in all three arms."

According to the "General Notes," the grand total of persons liable to military service in the Transvaal was 31,329, whilst the estimate of males between sixteen to sixty in the Free State was 22,314. It is evident that these numbers must have been considerably augmented at the time of the war when note is taken of:—

- A. The number of prisoners in exile or South Africa at the close of the war.
- B. The number of Burghers who surrendered after the war.
- C. The number of Burghers who had previously surrendered and settled down on the farms.
- D. The number of those killed by disease or wounds.
- E. The rebels who returned to the other Colonies before the end of the war.

The work contains valuable notes on the various districts of the Transvaal and the Orange Free State, and much other interesting information.

*(SOUTH AFRICAN WAR, 1899-1902): (MUSINGS WITHOUT METHOD): Musings without Method. A Record of 1900-01. By Annalist. William Blackwood & Sons: Edinburgh and London. Pp. 10, 323. 8vo. 1902.

The volume contains many references to the South African War, 1899-1902, and denounces the action of the Radicals, who, it is asserted, "have always reserved for unselfish and patriotic statesmen the rankest flowers of their rhetorical abuse. . . ." It is observed that there is a certain paper "whose leader-writers need not have penned a single fresh article: they had but to change the name, and the libels consecrated to Sir Bartle Frere, twenty years ago, would have suited the case of Lord Milner . . . in truth, the sacrifice of Sir Bartle Frere is amongst the most painful episodes of our history: it was not merely a patent disloyalty to a great public servant, but it involved the country in an endless waste of life and gold. All that we have endured since of insolence and warfare was foreseen by Sir Bartle and might have been prevented."

STATHAM, Commander E. P.: Privateers and Privateering. . . . With eight Illustrations. London: Hutchinson & Co. . . . xii + 382 pp. 8vo. 1910.

Some particulars are afforded respecting the privateer Chance, a private ship-of-war belonging to Mr. Hogan of Cape Town, commanded by Mr. William White. The vessel was fitted out at the Cape, and its commander addressed a letter to Vice-Admiral Sir Roger Curtis, Bart., which contains an account of his proceedings during a cruise on the coast of Peru. Sir

Roger Curtis, in a letter addressed to Evan Nepean, Esq., Secretary to the Admiralty, dated Cape Town, December 20, 1901, forwards a copy of the account of the cruise in which he remarks that the commander of the privateer "appears to have uniformly acted with great propriety, . . . his conduct, and that of his officers and men, was on two occasions . . . highly creditable to them. . . ."

The Preface is altogether different to that in the earlier edition, and the author observes, "In this abridgment we have the romance shorn of the political 'tips' . . . Jeanne and Una, Aurelio and Holroyd are all imaginary personages . . . Libya is Africa ; Secheland is the Transvaal ; Uncle Saul is President Kruger ; Mr. Cecil, Mr. Rhodes ; Zahlbar, Dr. Jameson ; Blastus, Mr. Chamberlain ; Mr. Loftie, Mr. Garrett of the Cape Times ; Hopetown, of course, is Capetown ; Johnston, Johannesburg ; Mackenzieland, Bechuanaland. . . . Young, M.A., B.B.Sc., F.R.S.E., F.G.S., Professor of Geology and Mineralogy at the Transvaal University College, Johannesburg. With Portrait. Longmans, Green & Co. . . . London, New York, Bombay, and Calcutta. Darter Bros. & Co. : Capetown. vi + 123 pp. Cr. 8vo. 1908.

George William Stow was born at Nuneaton, Warwickshire, in 1822, and was destined for the medical profession, but after five years' study he determined to abandon it and to emigrate to South Africa. Here, after acting for a time as a teacher in the Albany district, he started farming, and later on he conducted a school, but led a somewhat unsettled life for some period during the Kaffir War of 1850-2. About this time he began to take that interest in geology which so much influenced his future career. Later on he removed to Port Elizabeth, where at first he engaged in commercial pursuits, but took a prominent share in the scientific and literary movements in the town. Proceeding to Queenstown, "Stow devoted a considerable portion of his leisure time to the prosecution of his geological studies," and soon after paid several visits to the newly discovered diamond fields of Griqualand West. In the year 1873 he made a "proposal to the several South African Governments" to fit out a geological expedition for the inspection of the various Colonies ; the only Colony which took the matter up was "Griqualand West," but the account of Stow's survey of this part of South Africa is still unpublished. During the rest of his life Mr. Stow devoted himself to geological investigations in Griqualand West and the Orange Free State, and to studies of the ethnography of the sub-continent. He died of heart disease near Viljoen's Drift on March 15, 1882. Stow had to contend with the indifference to and ridicule of science which characterised many who could have assisted him in the seventies and eighties in South Africa. "The poverty, the disappointments that persistently dogged his steps, the absence of that recognition and sympathy that might have helped him the better to endure his sufferings, the courage and pertinacity with which, notwithstanding, he held to his purpose, and the splendid work he accomplished give him a place by himself in the annals of the geology of his adopted country."

- *(WALKER, J.) ? : (Sixteen Original Coloured Drawings of Cape Town and Native Races). G. J. Walker, about 1850. Bound up in a Folio Volume. Folio. (1850.)

Most of these sixteen water-colour drawings were reproduced in "Sketches of some of the various Classes and Tribes inhabiting the Colony of the Cape of Good Hope and the Interior of Southern Africa," . . . published by W. Robt. and Lowes Dickinson, London, 1851. See (CAPE OF GOOD HOPE) : (SKETCHES OF TRIBES, 1851). In the Preface to the latter work it is stated that "the originals of these sketches are from the talented pencil of a gentleman many years resident at the Cape, and were taken by him from Nature during an expedition into the interior."

Note.—I have, as yet, been unsuccessful in my attempts to trace the artist of these drawings, which are of considerable ability. They are all signed J. W., and the volume in which they are bound up contains a note in which they are attributed to Mr. G. J. Walker.

In arranging the collection, which was formerly the property of Mr. A. De Smidt, I came across several pencil sketches, apparently replicas of the coloured drawings in this volume, some of them slightly different in detail. See (DE SMIDT, A.) : (COLLECTION OF PENCIL, SEPIA, AND COLOURED ILLUSTRATIONS). Whether these are the original pencil sketches, or copies of either the original coloured drawings, or of the coloured engravings in the published drawings, I am unable to decide.—S. M.

*WHEELER, STEPHEN: Sikhs and Boers: A Parallel. In "The Anglo-Saxon Review," vol. iii. pp. 221-230. John Lane: London and New York. Folio. 1899.

The writer makes the most of certain points of similarity between the two campaigns, and it is remarked that "the Government at Pretoria is wretchedly corrupt; the Sikh administration was only a few degrees worse. . . . In each case we have the might, majesty, and dominion of Great Britain defied by a people who, just emerging from barbarism, retain in some measure the sterner virtues of primitive men, but have acquired some of the practical advantages of civilisation. . . . Need it be said that among the Irish Nationalists the Sikhs of the Punjab found the same sympathy which from the same quarter has been extended to-day to the Boers of the Transvaal."

*WILKINSON, SPENSER: On the Art of Going to War. In "The Anglo-Saxon Review," vol. iii. pp. 165-180. John Lane: London and New York. Folio. 1899.

Referring to the outbreak of the South African War, 1899-1902, the writer remarks, "In the first half of May (1899) the Government decided to put its categorical question to the Government of the Transvaal. This was done at Bloemfontein by Sir Alfred Milner, whose language expressed in the clearest and simplest way the true nature of the situation, and could leave no doubt in President Kruger's mind that the rejection of the moderate proposals made must ultimately lead to war. The President's reply was a categorical negative. That was the moment for active preparation, for the calling out of the Reserves, and for the despatch of troops . . . (but) . . . No military preparations took place, though the negotiations were accompanied by ministerial speeches implying that the Government intended to take up arms in case a satisfactory agreement was not reached."
